Die would we daily, once it to expert.—Spenser.

EXPERTLY, eks-pert'le, ad. In a skillful or dexterous manner; adroitly; with readiness and accuracy.

EXPERTNESS, eks-pert'nes, s. Skill derived from practice; readiness; dexterity; adroitness.

EXPETIBLE, eks'pe-te-bl, a. (expetibilis, Lat.) That may be wished for; desirable.—Obsolete.

It is more expetible than an appointment in some circumstances more perfect, without the same uniform order and peace therewith.—Fuller.

EXPIABLE, eks'pe-a-bl, a. (expiables, Lat.) That may be expiated; that may be atoned for and done away.

EXPIATE, eks'pe-ate, v. a. (expio, Lat.) To atone for; to make satisfaction for; to extinguish the guilt of a crime by subsequent acts of piety or worship, by which the obligation to punish the crime is canceled; to make reparation for; to avert the threats of prodigies.

EXPIATION, eks-pe-a'shun, s. (expiação, Lat.) The act of atoning for a crime; the act of making satisfaction for an offence; atonement; satisfaction; the means by which atonement for crimes is made. Among the ancient Greeks and Romans, an act by which the threats of prodigies were averted.

EXPIATOR, eks'pe-ay-tur, s. One who expiates, or has expiated.

EXPIATORY, eks'pe-ay-tur-e, a. Having the power to make atonement or expiation.

EXPIATION, eks-pe-la'shun, s. (expiatio, Lat.) A stripping; the act of committing waste on land; waste. In the Roman Law, the term was applied to any injury or waste done to the estate of a minor.

EXPIRABLE, eks-pi'ra-bl, a. That may expire; that may come to an end.

EXPIRATION, eks-pe-ra'shun, s. (expiratio, Lat.) In Physiology, that part of respiration by which the air taken into the lungs is exhaled or expelled; the last emission of breath; death; the emission of volatile matter from any substance; evaporation; exhalation; matter expired; fume; vapour; cessation; close; end; conclusion; termination of a limited time.

EXPIRATORY, eks-pir'a-tur-e, a. Pertaining to the emission of breath from the lungs. In Anatomy, an epithet applied to those muscles which, by contracting the parietes of the thorax, occasion expiration. These muscles are chiefly the Inter-costales, Triangulares sterni, Serrati postici inferiores, Obliqui and Recti abdominis, Sacro-lumbales, and Quadrati lumborum.

EXPIRE, eks-pir', v. a. (expiro, Lat.) To breathe out; to throw out the breath from the lungs; to exhale; to emit in minute particles, as a fluid or volatile matter; to conclude;—(obsolete in the last sense;)

and abdominal organs, by the eye, hand, or ear, for the purpose of determining the nature and nature of any disease that they may be affected by.

EXPLO-RATOR, eks-plo-ra'tur, s. One who explores. Since invented by Beccaria, which consists of two insulated ends, furnished with wire, are fastened to a pole over the chimney the top of a tree. From this wire leads into a chamber, through a glass tube with sealing-wax, communicating in the chamber with an electrometer, by which the electric air may be daily observed.

EXPLO-RATORY, eks-plo-ra-tur-e, a. Serving to examine.

EXPLO-RER, eks-plo're, v. a. (exploreo, Lat.) To search for discovery; to view with care; to examine by the eye; to search by any means; to search or pry into; to scrutinize; to view with care; to examine closely, with a view to truth.

EXPLO-RIMENT, eks-plo're-ment, s. Search; trial. Used.

EXPLO-RER, eks-plo'rur, s. One who explores.

EXPLO-SION, eks-plo'zhun, s. A bursting with sudden or sudden expansion of any solid with force and a loud report; the discharge of a piece of ordnance with a loud resounding burst of sound in a volcano.

EXPLO-SIVE, eks-plo'siv, a. Driving or bursting out with force and noise; causing explosion. Explosive Cotton, a discovery made in 1846 in the preparation of cotton, by which it acquires the power of gunpowder. The mode of preparing described:—Mix in any convenient glass vessel by measure of nitric acid (sp. gr. 1.50), with an equal quantity of sulphuric acid (sp. gr. 1.80). When the mixture has cooled, add grains of fine cotton wool in a wedge-shaped form, pour the acid over it, and with a brush imbue the cotton as quickly as possible with acid. As soon as the cotton is completely imbued, pour off the acid, and with the aid of a brush squeeze out as much of the acid as is possible. Throw the mass into a tub full of water, and thoroughly wash it. The cotton has not the slightest acid taste. Squeeze it in a linen cloth, and dry it in the sun. By employing a large relative proportion of the acids to the cotton, or by using nitric acid, a still more highly explosive compound may be produced; but acid of the strength of proportions given, afford a very useful and moderate cost.—Gunpowder is a compound of charcoal, nitre (nitrate of potash), and sulphur.

In the process of making gun cotton, the cotton unites with the sulphur of the acids, and, consequently, presents a compound strictly analogous in its nature and properties to gunpowder.

EXPLO-SIVE, eks-plo'siv-le, ad. In an explosive manner.—See Spoliation.

EXPONENT, eks-po'nent, s. (exponens, Lat.) In mathematics, the same as index. It means the number or symbol, as 2 in the expression  $x^2$ , is the index of  $x^4$ . The exponent of the proportion between two numbers or quantities is the quotient arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent.

EXPONENTIAL—EX POST FACTO.

EXPONENTIAL, eks-po-nen'shal, a. Pertaining to, or of the nature of, an exponent. Exponential calculus, in Fluxions, the method of differencing or finding the fluxions of exponential quantities. Exponential curve, a curve, the nature of which is defined or expressed by an exponential equation. Exponential equation is one in which is contained an exponential quantity, as the equation  $a^x = b$ , or  $x^a = a$ , &c. Exponential quality is that whose power is a variable quantity, as the expression  $a^x$ , or  $x^a$ . Exponential quantities are of several degrees:  $a^x$  of the first order;  $x^a$  of the second order; and  $x^{a^2}$  of the third order, and so on.

EXPORTIUM, eks-po're-am, s. (exo, outside, and spora, a sporule, Gr. from the external situation of the sporules.) A genus of Fungi, found on the branches of the Linden tree: Tribe, Coniomycetes.

EXPORT, eks-por'te, v. a. (exporto, Lat.) To carry out; to convey or transport, in traffic, produce, and goods, from one country to another.

EXPORTER, eks-por'te, s. A commodity actually conveyed from one country or state to another in traffic, or a commodity which may be exported.—Used chiefly in the plural, Exports. Export trade, the trade which consists in the exportation of commodities.

EXPORTABLE, eks-por'te-a-bl, a. That may be exported.

EXPORTATION, eks-por-ta'shun, s. The act of exporting; the act of conveying goods and productions from one country or state to another; the act of carrying out.

EXPORTER, eks-por'ter, s. The person who exports; one who ships goods, wares, and merchandise of any kind to a foreign country.

EXPOSAL, eks-po'zal, s. Exposure.—Obsolete.

EXPOSE, eks-poze, v. a. (exposer, Fr.) To lay open; to set to public view; to disclose; to uncover or draw from concealment; to make bare; to remove from anything that which guards or protects; to remove from shelter; to place in a situation to be affected or acted on; to lay open to attack by any means; to make liable; to subject; to put in the power of; to lay open to censure, ridicule, or contempt; to lay open to examination; to put in danger; to cast out to chance; to place abroad, or in a situation unprotected; to make public; to offer; to place in a situation to invite purchasers; to offer to inspection.

EXPOSE', eks-poz'ay, s. (French.) Exposition; recital of facts or reasons for explanation.

EXPOSEDNESS, eks-po'zed-nes, s. A state of being exposed; open to attack, or unprotected.

EXPOSER, eks-po'zur, s. One who exposes.

EXPOSITION, eks-po-zish'un, s. A laying open; a setting to public view; a situation in which a thing is exposed or laid open, or in which it has an unobstructed view, or in which a free passage to it is open; explanation; interpretation.

EXPOSITIVE, eks-poz'e-tiv, a. Explanatory; laying open.

EXPOSITOR, eks-poz'e-tur, s. (Latin.) One who expounds or explains; an interpreter; a dictionary or vocabulary which explains words.

EXPOSITORY, eks-poz'e-tur-e, a. Serving to explain; tending to illustrate.

FEOFFEE, fef-fe', s. A person who is infeoffed, or invested with a fee or corporeal hereditament.

FEOFFMENT, fef'ment, s. (feoffare, or infeudare, to give one a fief, Lat.) This word is generally defined to be 'a gift of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, to a man and his heirs for ever, accompanied by the delivery of seisin, and the possession of the thing granted.' The deed or instrument by which such a donation is effected is also termed a feoffment, and he who so gives, or infeoffs, is termed the feoffor; and the person to whom the lands are given is denominated the feoffee; and by such a gift he is said to be infeoffed. In order to constitute such a gift a feoffment, livery of seisin was absolutely necessary, without which the feoffee had but a mere estate at will. This livery of seisin was nothing else than the pure feudal investiture, or delivery of corporeal possession of the lands or tenements to the feoffee. A feoffment was formerly the usual mode of conveying the freehold from man to man; but of late years it has been almost entirely superseded by the conveyance by lease and release.—*Co. FIRMAMENT, fer'ma-ment, s. (firmamentum, Lat.)

In Scripture, denotes the great arch or expanse over our heads, in which are placed the atmosphere and the clouds, and in which the stars appear to be placed, and are really seen. In the Ptolemaic astronomy, the firmament is the eighth heaven or sphere, with respect to the seven spheres of the planets which it surrounds. It is supposed to have two motions; a diurnal motion, given to it by the primum mobile, from east to west about the poles of the ecliptic; and another opposite motion from west to east, which last it finishes, according to Tycho, in 25,412 years; according to Ptolemy, in 36,000; and according to Copernicus, in 25,800; in which time the fixed stars return to the same points in which they were at the beginning. This period is commonly called the Platonic or great year.

FIRMAMENTAL, fer-ma-men'tal, a. Pertaining to the firmament; celestial; being of the upper regions.

FIRMAMENTUM, fer-ma-men'tum, s. (Latin.) In Rhetoric, the chief stay and support of any cause.—Obsolete.

FIRMAN, } fer'man, or fer-mawn', s. (Persian, FERMAN, } a command.) A decree issued by FIRMAUN, } the Turkish Sultan, signed with his own cipher or signet, as when a pacha or other officer of state is appointed. Firman is also the name given to a passport which the pachas are in the habit of granting to travellers. The firman of death is a sentence of summary execution issued by the Sultan against a pacha, or other state officer, the written order of which is intrusted to a state messenger, whose duty it is to see it executed.

FIRMARATIO, fer-mar-ra'she-o, } s. In Law, the FIRMATIO, fer-ma'she-o, } doe season, as distinguished from the buck season.

FIRME, ferm, s. In Heraldry, a cross pattee throughout.

FIRM-FOOTED, ferm'füt-ed, a. Standing firmly; walking without stumbling.

FIRMITUDE, fer'me-tude, s. Strength; solidity.—Obsolete.

FIRMITY—FIRSTLING.

FIRMITY, fer'me-te, s. Firmness; strength.—Obsolete.

FIRMLESS, ferm'les, a. Detached from substance. Does passion still the firmless mind controul.—Pope.

FIRMLIER, ferm'le-ur, ad. More firmly.

FIRMLY, ferm'le, ad. Solidly; compactly; closely; steadily; with constancy; steadfastly; immovably.

FIRMNESS, ferm'ness, s. Closeness or denseness of structure; compactness; hardness; solidity; stability; constancy; fixedness; steadfastness. In Phrenology, a primitive power of the mind, situated at the anterior part of the vertex of the head, supposed to have been first observed by Lavater, and confirmed by Gall. Its functions, in a healthy state, are perseverance, energy, decision, promptitude. Its extreme development, obstinacy and self-will; its deficiency, instability and vacillation.

FIROLA, fer'o-la, s. A genus of Gasteropod Mollusca, having the body, tail, foot, branchiae, and visceral mass, as in the Carinaria, but, as far as known, without a shell: Order, Heteropoda.

FIRST, furst, a. (first, or fyrst, Sax. furst, Germ.) Advanced before or further than any other in progression; foremost in; preceding all others in the order of time; preceding all others in number; preceding all others in rank, dignity, or excellence;—ad. before any other in the order of time; before any other in progression; before anything else in order of proceeding or consideration; before all others in rank. First or last, at the beginning or end;

And all are fools and lovers first or last.—Dryden.

first-begotten, or first-begot, first produced; eldest of children; first-born, first brought forth; first in the order of nativity; most excellent; most exalted;—s. the first-born child of a family; the first in the order of birth; first-created, created before any other; first-fruit, the fruit or produce first matured. Among the Hebrews, first-fruits (primitivæ) were oblations brought to the temple, of wheat, barley, grapes, figs, &c., as an acknowledgment to God of his sovereign dominion. There was another kind of first-fruits: when bread was kneaded in a family, a portion of it was set apart and given to the priest, or Levite, who dwelt in the place; but if there was no priest, or Levite, it was cast into the fire and consumed. In Law, first-fruits, the profits of every spiritual living for one year, paid originally to the pope, throughout Christendom; but in England the first-fruits and tenths were taken from the pope and given to the king, by the statutes 25 Henry VIII. c. 20, and 26 Henry VIII. c. 3. This branch of the royal revenue was given up by Queen Anne, and applied to the augmentation of small clerical livings. The payment of first-fruits in Ireland was abolished by stat. 3 and 4 Wm. IV. c. 37. In Plastering, first coat, the laying the plaster on the laths, or the rentering, as it is called, on brickwork, when only two coats are used. When three are used, it is called pricking-up when upon laths, and roughing-in when upon bricks. In Music, first, one of the parts of a duet, trio, &c.

FIRSTLING, furst'ling, a. First produced;—s. the first produce or offspring; the first thing thought or done.—Obsolete.

The very firstlings of my heart shall be

FIRSTLY—FISH.

FIRSTLY, furst'le, ad. Improperly used instead first.

FIRST-RATE, furst'rate, a. Of the highest excellence; pre-eminent; being of the large size, a first-rate ship.

FISC, fisk, } s. (fiscus, a basket, Lat.)
FISCUS, fis'kus, } name given during the Roman empire, and afterwards in the monarchies which rose on its ruins, to the private treasury of the sovereign, as distinguished from ararium, the treasury of the state.

FISCAL, fis'kal, a. Relating to the pecuniary interests of the sovereign or of the community;—s. exchequer; revenue; treasury. In Scotland an officer who takes precognitions, and acts as public prosecutor in criminal cases. In Spain and Portugal, the royal solicitor; the name is also used in Spain for an informer.

FISCHERIA, fish-e-re-a, s. (in honour of Dr. Fisch director of the Botanic Garden at St. Petersburg) A genus of climbing evergreen shrubs, with downy branched and yellowish-green flowers: Order, A. elepiadaceæ.

FISH, fish, s. (fisc, Sax. fisch, Germ.) In Zoology a vertebrated oviparous animal possessing a double circulation, but on which respiration is effected through the medium of waters, by means of branchiae or gills, suspended on arches, which are attached to the hyoid bone, each composed of numerous laminae placed in a row and covered with a tissue of innumerable blood-vessels; the part of fish used as food. In popular language the term fish is erroneously applied to the Crustacea which are Mammalia and breathe by lungs. The word fish is often used for the placoid fishes.—See Ichthyology. Craw-fish, crab-fish, and shell-fish, are terms also used in common phraseology for the Crustaceans and testaceous Mollusca;—v. a. to attempt to catch fish, whether by angling or net; to attempt to obtain by artifice; to draw forth in a cunning indirect manner. To draw out of the water, as to fish an anchor. In Navigation, a machine employed to hoist and draw up the flukes of the ship's anchor towards the top of the bow, in order to stow it after it has been catted. It is composed of four parts: viz., the pendent, the block, the haul, and the tackle; which, with their several uses, are described under the respective terms. Fish-front, paunch, is a long piece of oak or fir timber, concave on one side and concave on the other, used to strengthen the lower masts or the yards when they are sprung, or have received some damage by battle or tempestuous weather, &c., to effect which they are well secured by stout rope, called wool or ing. Fish-gig, an instrument used to strike fish at sea, particularly dolphins. It consists of a staff, with three, four, or more barbed prongs of steel, and a line fastened to the end on which the prongs are fixed: to the end is fitted a piece of lead, which gives additional force to the stroke when the weapon flies, and causes the point to turn upward after the fish is penetrated. Fish Hawks, birds of the genus Haliaeetus: Subfamily, Accipitrinae. Fish Royal, in Law, the whale and sturgeon, which the king is entitled to when stranded, or caught near the shore. Fish room, in Navigation, a space in a ship between the afterhold and the spirit-room. Fish-pole, the common name of the annual plant Lepidium

Fishes, in Heraldry, are emblems of vigilance and watchfulness.—The following connected with the capture, the cook-utensils in fish:—Fish-hook, fish-fly, fish-kettle, fish-spoon, fish-fork, fish-knife, fish-boat, fisher-town, fishing-place, fish-market, fishmonger, fishwife, fish*fish'urman*, s. A person whose occupation is to catch fish.

fish'ur-e, s. A locality generally near or in an estuary or river, where fishes are taken in large quantities at certain seasons of the year.

Free fishery, in Law, an exclusive right in a public river. It is a royal prerogative.

It differs from several fishery, because in a several fishery must also be (or at least, in his right from) the owner of the soil, and the requisite in a free fishery. In a free fishery man has an exclusive right and property in fish before they are caught, but in a fish'ur not till afterwards.

fish'ol, a. Abounding with fish; stored with fish.—Obsolete.

Thus mean in state, sprite, my fishful pond is my delight.—Carew.

fish'gärth, s. An old term for a dam or weir in a river, made for taking fish.—Obsolete.

—See Isinglass.

fish'od haven and a plentiful fish'ing.—Spencer.

Falcon, the bird Falco haliaetus. It is more properly the water eagle of Britain, than the characters both of the falcons. It approaches the eagle in its habit of stooping on its prey; and in its structure of the wings. It is often called fish'ing-frog,—see Lophius.

fish'pond, s. An artificial pond for catching and breeding fish.

FISH-POND.—See Ichthyosis.

FISH, a. Consisting of fish; having the shape of fish; inhabited by fish.

FISSILE, fis'sil, a. (fissilis, Lat.) That may be split, cleft, or divided in the grain or natural cleavage.

FISSILITY, fis-sil'e-te, s. The quality of admitting to be cleft.

FISSIPARA, fis-sip'a-ra, s. (fundo, I divide, and pario, I engender, Lat.) In Zoology, the name given to those animals which propagate by spontaneous fission, or the detachment of a greater or less portion of the body, having an inherent power of self-support and growth, as in the Polypi, Infusoria, and certain worms.

FISSIPENÆ, fis-se-pen'ne, s. (fissus, and pinna, a wing, Lat.) The Pterophorites of Latreille; a section of the Nocturnal Lepidopterous insects, in which the four wings, or at least two, are split longitudinally, in the manner of branches or fingers, with fringed edges, and resembling feathers.

FISSIPED, fis'se-ped, a. (fissus, cleft, and pes, a foot, Lat.) Having the toes without a membrane;—s. an animal which has no membrane between the toes.

FISSIROSTRAL, fis-se-ros'tral, a. (fissus, and rostrum, a beak, Lat.) Belonging to the tribe Fissirostres.

FISSIROSTRES, fis-se-ros'tres, s. A tribe of Perching birds, in which the gape of the mouth is very wide; the feet are of different descriptions, but always short, and generally weak and imperfect. They feed on insects taken during flight: Order, Insectores.

FISSURA, fish-u'ra, s. (Latin.) A fissure. In Anatomy, F. silvii, the fissure which separates the anterior and middle lobes of the cerebrum. F. umbilicalis, the groove of the umbilical vein.

FISSURE, fish'ure, s. (fissura, Lat. fissure, Fr.) A cleft; a narrow chasm in which a breach has been made; a longitudinal opening;—v. a. to cleave; to make a fissure.

FISSURELLA, fish-u-rel'la, s. (fundo, I divide, Lat.) A genus of Gasteropods, with a shell in the shape of a limpet (patella), but having a slit or fissure at the apex of the cone. Fissure of the bones, in Surgery, is when they are divided transversely or longitudinally, not quite through, but cracked like glass by any external force.

FIST, fish, s. (fist, Sax.) The hand clenched; the hand with the fingers doubled into the palm, so as to deal a blow;—v. a. to strike with the fist; to grip with the fist.

We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throats,
And waked half dead with nothing.—Shaks.

FISTIC-NUT, fis'tik-nut, s. The fruit of the plant Pistachia vera.

FISTICUFFS, fis'ti-kufs, s. Blows dealt with the fist.

FISTUCA, fis'tu-ka, s. In Mechanics, a pile-driving instrument, with two handles, raised by pulleys, and guided in its descent to fall on the head of a pile, so as to drive it into the ground, being what is called by the workmen a monkey.

FISTULA, fis'tu-la, s. (Latin.) In the ancient Music, a kind of flute or flageolet made of reeds. In Pathology, a pipe-like sore with a narrow orifice, and without a tendency to heal. F. in ano, fistula which penetrates into the cellular substance about the anus, or into the rectum itself. F. in perinaeo, fistula in the course of the perinaum, from which it sometimes extends to the uterine, bladder, va-

FLOREN, flor'en, } s. An ancient gold coin of Florence, flor'ens, } Edward III., of six shillings sterling value.

FLORENCE, flor'ens, s. A kind of cloth; a kind of wine, so called from Florence in Italy.

FLORENTINE, flor'en-tine, s. A native of Florence; a silk stuff, chiefly used for men's waistcoats. It is made figured and plain, the latter being a twilled fabric. Two other stuffs of a coarser fabric are so termed—one composed of worsted, and the other of cotton, resembling jean; the first is used for common waistcoats, &c., and the other, generally striped, is employed in the making of trousers.

FLORESCENCE, flo-res'sens, s. (florescens, Lat.) In Botany, the season when plants expand their flowers.

FLORESTINA, flo-res-ti'na, s. A genus of Composite plants; Suborder, Tubulifloræ.

FLORET, flo'ret, a. (fleuriette, Fr.) In Botany, a small monopetalous flower, many of which, as in the Compositæ, enclosed in one calyx or perianth, and placed sessile on a common undivided receptacle, form a compound flower.

FLORIALGE, flo're-ij, s. Bloom; blossom.

FLORICERS, flo're-seps, s. (flor, a flower, and caput, the head, Lat.) A genus of Entozoa, having four little tentacula, with recurved spines at one extremity, by means of which they penetrate the viscera.

FLORICOMOUS, flo-rik'o-mus, a. (floricomus, Lat.) Having the top or head ornamented with flowers.

FLORID, flor'id, a. (florides, Lat.) Productive of covered with flowers;—(seldom used in ing senses;)

and purely ornamental garlands, delightful smell.—Sir T. Brown.

colour; flushed with red; embellished rs of rhetoric; enriched with lively dendid; brilliant. Florid style, in Ara particular kind of gothic architecture, auty and elaborateness of workmanship.
al characteristics are large arched win-numerous ramifications, consisting of mullions, filled with a variety of poly-ornamental buttresses crowned with alls filled with niches, pinnacles, and erminated with open mullion work, and various projections adorned with crockbosses, and other enrichments.

flor'id'e-te, s. Freshness or brightness floridness.

lor'id-le, ad. In a showy and imposing

, flor'id-nes, s. Brightness or fresh-lour or complexion; embellishment; naments; ambitious elegance; vigour;
ldom used in the last sense.

is, flo-rife-rus, a. (florifer, Lat.)
wers; producing flowers.

tox, flor-e-fe-ka'shun, s. The act, prone of flowering.

flor'e-fawrin, a. In the form of a flor'e-lege, s. (florilegus, that gathers t.) Anthology; a treatise on flowers.

used.

fin, s. (French.) A name given to lver coins, current in various parts of ent, especially Germany and Holland.
ial or convention florin, the integer of d principal coin in the Austrian em-th about 2s. 0½d. sterling; the Dutch ilder is equal to 1s. 8d. sterling; which e nearly (1s. 7½d.) the value of the rin (in 24½ guldenfuss), lately adopted er of account by the States of Southern m Germany. The Polish florin is equal ly. The florin is also a German gold about 6s. 11d., which is chiefly current tries bordering the Rhine.

rist, s. (fleuriste, Fr.) A cultivator one skilled in flowers; one who writes an account of plants.

lo'ron, s. (fluron, Fr.) A border
th flowers.

flor'u-lent, a. Flowery; blossoming.
e Fleury.

(Latin, a flower.) In Chemistry, the le parts of bodies separated from what flos'ku-lâr, } a. (flosculus, a little flos'ku-lus, } flower, Lat.) In Botdithet applied to compound flowers, com-many tubular monopetalous florets.

flos'kule, s. (flosculus, Lat.) In Botany, t lesser floret of an aggregate flower.

, flos fer're, s. (Latin, flower of iron.)
a variety of Arragonite, called by fter Hany, Coralloidal arragonite. It ttle cylinders, sometimes diverging and a point, and sometimes branched, like structure is fibrous, and the surface, which is smooth or garnished with little crystalline points, is often very white, with a silken lustre. It takes this name from its being often found in cavities in veins of sparry iron.

FLOSS, flos, s. (flos, Lat.) A term sometimes used in botanical works for a downy substance observed on the husks of certain fruits; the name also given in some places to the slag or liquid gloss which floats on the surface of a puddling furnace; the portions of ravelled silk broken off in the filature of the cocoons is so termed: after being carded like cotton or wool, it is spun into a coarse soft yarn or thread, for making articles of apparel, where an inferior kind of silk may be used.

FLOSSIFICATION, flos-se-fe-ka'shun, s. A flowering; expansion of flowers.

FLOTA, flo'ta, s. (Spanish.) A fleet, but appropriately a fleet of Spanish ships which formerly sailed every year from Cadiz to Vera Cruz in Mexico, to transport to Spain the productions of Spanish America.

FLOTAGE.—See Floatage.

FLOTAGES, flo'ta-jes, s. pl. In Law, things found floating on the sea.

FLOTANT, flo'tant, s. In Heraldry, a banner or anything flying.

FLOTE, flote, v. a. To skim.—Obsolete.

Such cheeses, good Cisle, ye floted too nigh!—Tusser.

FLOTILLA, flo-till'a, s. (Spanish, a little fleet.) A term applied to a fleet, however large, consisting of small vessels. That by which Bonaparte meditated the invasion of Great Britain was composed of 2,365 vessels of every description; it was manned by 17,000 sailors, and was calculated to carry 160,000 soldiers and 10,000 horses.

FLOTOVIA, flo-to've-a, s. A genus of Composite plants; Suborder, Labiatiflore.

FLOTSAM, flot'sam, s. In Law, goods cast from a ship and floating on the water. The term jetsam is used for goods cast from a ship and sunk; and logam for such as are sunk, but tied to a buoy. If the owners of goods in these conditions are not known, they belong to the king.

FLOUNCE, flowns, v. n. (plonsen, Dut.) To throw the limbs and the body one way and the other; to spring, turn, or twist with sudden effort or violence; to struggle, as a horse in mire; to move with passionate agitation;—v. a. to deck with a flounce;
—s. a narrow piece of cloth sewed to a petticoat, frock, or gown, with the lower border loose and spreading.

FLOUNDER, flown'dur, s. (flundra, Swed.) In Zoology, see Pleuronectes;—v. n. to fling the limbs and body, as in making efforts to move; to struggle; to roll, toss, and tumble.

FLOUR, flowr, s. (fleur, Fr.) The edible part of corn when ground; meal;—v. a. (flourer, Span.) to grind and bolt; to convert into flour; to sprinkle with flour.

FLOURISH, flur'rish, v. n. (floresco, Lat.) To thrive; to grow luxuriantly; to increase and enlarge, as a healthy growing plant; to be prosperous; to increase in wealth or honour; to grow in grace and in good works; to abound in the con-solutions of religion; to grow or be augmented; irregular figures; to boast; to vaunt; to brag;—

v. a. to adorn with flowers or beautiful figures, either natural or artificial; to ornament with anything showy; to spread out; to enlarge into figures; to move in bold or irregular figures; to move in circles or vibrations by way of show or triumph; to brandish; to embellish with the flowers of diction; to adorn with rhetorical figures or ostentatious eloquence; to set off with a parade of words: to adorn; to grace; to mark with a flourish or irregular stroke;—s. beauty; showy splendour; ostentatious embellishment; ambitious copiousness or amplification; parade of words and figures; show; figures formed by bold irregular lines, or fanciful strokes of the pen or graver; a brandishing; the waving of a weapon or other thing. In Music, a prelude or preparatory air, without any settled rule; the decorative notes which a singer sometimes adds to a passage; the sounding of trumpets on receiving any officer or person of distinction.

FLOURISHER, flur'ish-ur, s. One who flourishes; one who thrives or prospers; one who brandishes; one who adorns with fanciful figures.

FLOURISHINGLY, flur'ish-ing-le, ad. With flourishes; ostentatiously.

FLOW, flowt, v. a. (flyte, to scold or brawl, Scot.) To mock or insult; to treat with contempt;—v. n. to practise mocking; to sneer; to behave with contempt;—s. a mock; an insult.

Their doors are barr'd against a bitter flowt;
Sneer, if you please; but you shall snarl without.—Dryden.

FLOWER, flowt'ur, s. One who flouts and flings; a mocker.

FLOWINGLY, flowt'ing-le, ad. With flouting; insultingly.

FLOW, flo, v. n. (flowan, Sax.) To move along an inclined plain, or on descending ground, by the operation of gravity, and with a continual change of place among the particles or parts, as a fluid; to melt; to become liquid; to proceed; to issue; to abound; to have in abundance; to be full; to be copious, as flowing cups or goblets; to glide along smoothly, without harshness or asperity; to be smooth, as composition or utterance; to hang loose and waving; to rise, as opposed to ebb; to move in the arteries and veins of the body; to circulate, as blood; to issue, as rays or beams of light; to move in a stream, as air;—v. a. to overflow; to deluge;—s. a stream of water or other fluid; a current; a current of water with a swell or rise; a stream of anything; abundance; copiousness with action; a stream of diction, denoting abundance of words at command, and facility of speaking; volubility; free expression or communication of generous feelings and sentiments.

FLOWER, flow'ur, s. (flos, floris, Lat.) In Botany, the inflorescence, or that part of a plant which contains the organs necessary for the impregnation and preparation of the fruit and seed. Flowers, when complete, are furnished with a calyx, corolla, stamens, and pistils; the stamens carrying the anthers or male organs of reproduction, and the pistils the stigmas or female organs, by which the pollen, or impregnating dust, is conveyed into the ovary or seed-vessel;—the early part of life, or rather of manhood; the prime; youthful vigour; youth; the best or finest part of a thing; the most valuable part; the essence;

be or that which is most distinguished thing valuable. In Rhetoric, figures of discourse or composition; charges;—v. n. to blossom; to bloom the petals as a plant; to be in the spring of life; to flourish; to be young and vigorous; to froth; to ferment mantle as new beer; to come to the surface;—v. a. to embellish with flowers; to adorn with imitated flower-bearing, producing flowers; flower which produces flowers; flower-crown with a crown of flowers; flower-gate in which flowers are chiefly cultivated; incoven, decorated with flowers; dressed with garlands of flowers; pot in which flowers or shrubs are raised; Pyrotechnics, a particular kind of fire when ignited, throws out a fountain-shaped sparks; flower-stalk, in Botany, the duncle of a plant, or the stem that bears the flower or fructification.

FLOWERAGE, flow'ur-ij, s. Store of flowers; a flower.

FLOWER-FENCE.—See Poinciana.

FLOWERFUL, flow'ur-ful, a. Abounding with flowers.

FLOWERHEAD, flow'ur-hed, s. In Botany, the capitulum, or that mode of inflorescence in which all the flowers are sessile, upon a common receptacle, as in the daisy.

FLOWERINESS, flow'ur-e-nes, s. The quality of being flowery; or of abounding with flowers; abundance of figures.

FLOWERING, flow'ur-ing, s. The state in which plants blossom; the act of adorning. Flowering ash,—see Ornus. Flow the plant Osmundia regalis. Flow the plant Botanus umbellatus.

FLOWERLESS, flow'ur-les, a. Having no visible organs of fructification.

FLOWERS, flow'urz, s. pl. A name given by old chemists to certain light flocules obtained by distillation. Flowers of detached crystalline grains which are received during the process of the common sulphur. Flowers of antimony, the combustion of antimony, which is attended with a very intense temperature, and produces a white vapour, which condenses on cool surfaces in the form of small shining needles formerly called the argentine flowers.

FLOWER-STALK.—See Peduncle.

FLOWERY, flow'ur-e, a. Full of flowers; adorned with blossoms; adorned with artificial flowers; or the figures of blossoms; richly adorned with figurative language; florid.

FLOWING, flo'ing, s. The act of running as a fluid; an issuing; an overflowing; a running.

FLOWINGLY, flo'ing-le, ad. With volubility; abundantly.

FLOWINGNESS, flo'ing-nes, s. Smoothness; a stream of diction.

FLOWK.—See Fluka.

FLOWN. Part of the verb To fly.

FLUATE, flu'ate, a. In Mineralogy, a compound of fluorine acid with a salt.

Fluate of Lime.—See Fluor-spat.

FLUATES—FLUENTLY.

FLUATES, flu'ayts, s. pl. In Chemistry, compounds of the metallic oxides, earths, and alkalies, with fluoric acids.

FLUCERINE, flu'ser-rin, s. (fluor, and cerium.) The neutral fluato of Cerium, a Swedish mineral, occurring in six-sided prisms in plates, and in amorphous masses of a reddish or wax-yellow colour. It consists of oxide of cerium, 82.64; yttria, 1.12; fluoric acid, 16.24: sp. gr. 4.7.  $H = 4$ .

FLUCTIFEROUS, fluk-tif'e-rus, a. (fluctifer, Lat.) Producing waves.

FLUCTIFRAGOUS, fluk-tif'ra-gus, a. (fluctifragus, Lat.) Breaking the waves.

FLUCTISONOUS, fluk-tis'o-nus, a. (fluctisonus, Lat.) Having the sound of waves; sounding like the roaring billows.

FLUCTIVAGOUS, fluk-tiv'a-gus, a. (fluctivagus, Lat.) Floating on the waves.

FLUCTUANT, fluk'tu-ant, a. (fluctuans, from fluctus, a wave, Lat.) Moving like a wave; wavering; unsteady.

FLUCTUATE, fluk'tu-ate, v. n. (fluctuo, Lat.) To move as a wave; to roll hither and thither; to wave; to float backward and forward, as on waves; to move now in one direction and now in another; to be wavering or unsteady; to be irresolute or undetermined; to rise and fall; to be in an unsettled state; to experience sudden vicissitudes.

FLUCTUATING, fluk'tu-ay-ting, a. Unsteady; wavering; changeable.

FLUCTUATION, fluk-tu-a'shun, s. A motion like that of waves; a moving in this and that direction; unsteadiness; a wavering; a rising and falling suddenly.

FLUDDER, } flud'dar, s. An aquatic bird of the FLUDER, } Diver kind, nearly as large as a goose.

FLUE, flu, s. (derivation uncertain.) The long open tube of a chimney, from the fireplace to the top of the shaft, for carrying off the smoke;—(fluesen, Germ.) soft down or fur; very fine hair.—Local in the last two senses.

FLUELLITE, flu'el-lite, s. The fluato of alumina, a name given by Dr. Wollaston to some minute crystals detected on a specimen of Wavellite from Cornwall. The crystals were acute, rhombic, and octahedrous, having the summits replaced by a plane.

FLUENCE.—See Fluency.

FLUENCY, flu'en-se, s. (fluens, from fluo, I flow, Lat.) The quality of flowing, applied to speech or language; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity; volubility; readiness of utterance; facility of words; affluence; abundance.—Obsolete in the last two senses.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Even all they wish: and yet their narrow hearts Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave.—Sandys.

FLUENT, flu'ent, a. Liquid; flowing; passing; ready in the use of words; voluble; copious; having words at command, and uttering them with facility and smoothness;—s. a stream; a current of water;—(obsolete in the last two significations);—s. in Mathematical analysis, a variable quantity, considered as increasing or diminishing. The word integral is now used, the differential integral calculus having superseded the methods of fluxions and fluents.

FLUENTLY, flu'ent-le, ad. With ready flow; volubly; without hesitation or obstruction.

FLUGELMAN—FLUORIC.

FLUGELMAN, flu'gel-man, s. (flugelmann, Germ.)

In Military tactics, a well-drilled soldier appointed to stand in front of the line, and give the time in the manual and platoon exercises.

FLUID, flu'id, a. (fluidus, Lat.) Having parts which easily move and change their relative position without separation, and which easily yield to pressure; that may flow, as water, spirit, or air;—s. any substance whose parts easily move and change their relative position without separation, and which yields to the slightest pressure; a liquid; liquor, opposed to a solid.

FLUIDITY, flu-id'e-te, s. (fluo, I flow, Lat.) The quality of being capable of flowing; that state of a body in which its constituent particles are so slightly cohesive as to yield to the smallest impressions.

FLUIDNESS.—See Fluidity.

FLUKE, fluke, s. The name given to the Flounder, or fish of the genus Pleuronectes; also, that part of an anchor which takes hold of the ground. Fluke-worm, the Distoma hepaticum, a species of Entozoa which infests the ducts of the liver of different animals, especially those of the sheep.

FLUME, flume, s. (flum, a stream, Sax.) The passage or channel for the water that drives a mill-wheel.

FLUMINOUS, flu'me-nus, a. (flumen, a river, Lat.) Abounding with rivers.

FLUMMERY, flum'mur-e, s. (Uymry, Welsh.) A sort of jelly made of flour or meal; pap; in vulgar use, anything insipid, or nothing to the purpose; flattery.

FLUNG. Past and past part. of the verb To fling.

FLUOBORATES, flu-o-bo'rayts, s. In Chemistry, combinations of various bases with fluoboric acid.

FLUOBORIC ACID GAS, flu-o-bo'rik as'id gas, s. A colourless gas, obtained by heating to redness a mixture of dry boracic acid and powdered fluor-spar. Fluosilicic acid gas, a gas obtained by applying a gentle heat to one part of powdered fluor-spar, one of silica, and two of sulphuric acid, in a retort.

FLUOPHOSPHATE, flu-o-fos'fate, s. A combination of the fluoric and phosphoric acids, as in Wagnierite, or Fluophosphate of Magnesia.

FLUOR, flu'or, } s. (Latin, a stream.)

FLUOR-SPAR, flu'or-spär, } Octahedral fluor, or Fluato of Lime, a mineral, of which there are three varieties—the compact, the crystallized, and the foliated. Some of the varieties are of great beauty, from their variegated and purple or blue colours, and the distinctness of their cubical crystals. It consists of lime, 67.75; and fluoric acid, 32.75. Fluor-albus, a disorder to which females are subjected at all ages, but more particularly in the prime of life, consisting of an irregular discharge of impure mucid humour.—See Leucorrhœa.

FLUORATED, flu'or-ay-ted, a. Combined with fluoric acid.

FLUORIC, flu-or'ik, a. Pertaining to fluor.

FLUORIC ACID, flu-or'ik as'id, s. Acid obtained in the form of a gas, by putting a quantity of fluor-spar into a retort, and pouring over it an equal quantity of sulphuric acid, and then applying a gentle heat. It has the property of destroying the skin almost immediately if applied to it, and of corroding glass and other siliceous substances.

FLUORIDES—FLUSTER.

FLUORIDES, flū'o-rides, s. pl. Combinations of fluorine with other bases.

FLUORINE, flū'o-rine, s. A simple elementary gaseous body, first procured by Baudrimont by passing fluoride of boron over minium heated to redness, and receiving the gas in a dry vessel. It is of a yellowish-brown colour. Its odour resembles chlorine and burnt sugar. It has bleaching properties: sp. gr. 1.289. Its equivalent is 18.68; Symb. F. Silico-hydrofluoric acid, 3 atoms of a definite compound of hydrofluoric, and 2 atoms of silicic acids, equiv. = 78.58; Symb. Si + 3F, or SiF<sub>3</sub>. A variety of similar compounds may be obtained by double decomposition, or by the action of silico-hydrofluoric acid on metallic oxides. The following are some of the compounds of Fluorine:—Fluoric acid = 3 atoms of fluorine + 1 of boron, equiv. 66.98; formula BF<sub>3</sub>. Hydrofluoric acid = 1 atom of fluorine + 1 of hydrogen, equiv. 19.68; formula HF. Fluosilicic acid = 3 atoms of fluorine + 1 of silicon, equiv. 78.58; formula SiF<sub>3</sub>.

FLUOSILICATE OF ALUMINA.—See Topaz.

FLUOSILICIC, flū-o-se-lis'ik, a. Composed of or containing fluoric acid with silic.

FLURRY, flur're, s. A sudden blast or gust, or a light temporary breeze; a sudden shower of short duration; agitation; commotion; bustle; hurry; —v. a. to put in agitation; to excite or alarm.

FLUSH, flush, v. n. (fließen, Germ.) To flow and spread suddenly; to rush; to come in haste; to start; to become suddenly red; to glow; to be gay, splendid, or beautiful; —v. a. to redden suddenly; to cause the blood to rush suddenly into the face; to elate; to elevate; to excite the spirits; to animate with joy; —a. fresh; full of vigour; affluent; abounding; well-furnished; free to spend; liberal; prodigal; —s. a sudden flow of blood to the face, or, more generally, the redness of the face which proceeds from such an afflux of blood; sudden impulse or excitement; sudden glow; bloom; growth; abundance; —(flux, Fr. and Span.) a run of cards of the same suit; a term for a number of ducks; a term used by workmen to signify a continuity of surface in two bodies joined together—thus, in Joinery, the style, rails, and munnions are usually made flush, that is, the wood of one piece on one side of the joint does not project or recede from that on the other; also, a term to denote the complete bedding of masonry or brickwork, in the mortar or cement used for the connection of the stones or bricks, so as to leave no vacant space where the stones or bricks do not nicely fit in their places. In Masonry, or Brickwork, the aptitude of two brittle bodies to splinter at the joints should the stones or bricks come in contact when contiguous in a wall. Flush-deck, in a ship, a deck without a half-deck or fore-castle.

As when a falcon hath with nimble flight

FLUSHER, flush'ur, s. The lesser butcher bird.

FLUSHING, flush'ing, s. A glow of red in the face.

FLUSHINGLY, flush'ing-le, ad. In a manner that occasions a flush.

FLUSHNESS, flush'nes, s. Freshness.

FLUSTER, flus'tur, v. a. To make hot and rosy with drinking; to heat; to hurry; to agitate; to confuse;

Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have I to-night fluster'd with flowing cups.—Shake.

FLUSTRA—FLUVICOLINE.

—v. n. to be in a heat or bustle; to be agitated; —s. heat; glow; agitation; confusion; disorder.

FLUSTRA, flus'tra, s. A name given by Linnæus and Cuvier to a genus of Corallines, in which the cells, generally corneous, are united like honey-combs; they are found covering various bodies, and sometimes forming stems or leaves, of which, in certain species, one side only is furnished with cells, and in others both.

FLUTE, flute, s. (French.) A well-known wind instrument, with finger-holes and keys. Flute, or Flutings, in Architecture, upright channels on the shafts of columns, usually ending hemispherically at top and bottom. Their plane or horizontal section is sometimes circular or segmental, and sometimes, as in the Grecian examples, elliptical. The Doric column has twenty round its circumference; the Ionic, Corinthian, and Composite have twenty-four. The Tuscan column is never fluted. In Navigation, flute, or fluyt, is a kind of long vessel with flat ribs or floor timbers, round aft, and swelled in the middle, used chiefly for carrying provisions to fleets or squadrons of ships, though it is often used in merchandise. Armed in flute: an armed ship, with her guns of the lower tier and part of those of the upper tier removed, used as a transport, is said to be armed in flute; —v. n. to play on a flute; —v. a. to form flutes or channels in a column.

FLUTED, flut'ed, a. Channelled or furrowed, as on a column.

FLUTER, flut'ur, } s. A performer on the flute.

FLUTIST, flut'ist, }

FLUTING, flut'ing, s. A channel or furrow in a column; fluted work.

FLUTTER, flut'tur, v. n. (floteran, Sax.) To move or flap the wings rapidly, without flying, or with short flights; to hover; to move about briskly, irregularly, or with great bustle and show, without consequence;

No rag, no scrap of all the bean or wit,

That once so flutter'd, and that once so writ.—Pope.

to move with quick vibrations or undulations; to be in agitation; to fluctuate; to be in uncertainty; —v. a. to drive in disorder; to hurry the mind; to agitate; to throw into confusion; —s. vibration; undulation; quick and irregular motion; hurry; tumult; disorder of mind; confusion; irregular position.

FLUTTERING, flut'tur-ing, s. The act of hovering or flapping the wings without flight; a wavering; agitation.

FLUTTERINGLY, flut'tur-ing-le, ad. In a fluttering manner.

FLUVIAL, flu've-al, } a. (fluvialis, from flu- FLUVIATIC, flu-ve-at'ik, } vius, a river, Lat.) Belonging to rivers; growing or living in streams or ponds.

FLUVIALES.—See Naiadaceæ.

FLUVIALIST, flu've-al-ist, s. One who explains phenomena by existing streams.

FLUVIATILES, flu've-a-tiles, s. (fluvialis, belonging to a river, Lat.) A name given by Lamarck to a section of Polypifers, comprehending such as are inhabitants of fresh water.

FLUVICOLA, flu-vik'o-la, s. (fluvius, a river, and colo, I frequent, Lat.) A genus of birds, type of the subfamily Fluvicolinæ of Swainson's arrangement.

the genera.) The Water-chats, a subfamily of birds, placed by Swainson between the Psarinæ, or Black-caps, and the Muscapinæ, or Fly-catchers. The birds of this group have the legs formed for walking with long, strong tarsi. With one exception, the Seisura, a native of Australia, they live in the marshes, and on the banks of the rivers of tropical America: Family, Muscicapidæ.

FLUVIO-MARINE, flu've-o-ma-rin', a. In Geology, an epithet applied to such formations as have been deposited by the agency of rivers at the bottom of the sea, at a greater or less distance from their embouchures.

FLUX, fluks, s. (fluxus, from fluo, to flow, Lat.) The act of flowing; the motion or passing of a fluid; the moving or passing of anything in continued succession; any flow or issue of matter; a liquid state from the operation of heat; that which flows or is discharged; concurrence; confluence;—(obsolete in the last two senses.)

'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company.—Shaks.

In Pathology, a disease attended by an extraordinary secretion from the bowels. In Metallurgy, or Mineralogy, any substance used to facilitate the fluxion of metals or minerals. Flux and reflux of the tide, the regular and periodical motion of the sea, which happens twice in 24 hours 48 minutes. Black flux, the mixture of carbonate of potash and charcoal, which remains when tartar is deflagrated with half its weight of nitre; white flux is the name given when an equal weight of nitre is used, and the whole of the charcoal is burned off, and carbonate of potash remains;—a. flowing; moving; maintained by a constant succession of parts; inconstant; variable;—(not well authorized as an adjective.)

The flux condition of human affairs.—
Lord Bolingbroke.

—v. a. to melt; to fuse; to make fluid.—Obsolete as a verb.

FLUXATION, fluks-a'shun, s. A flowing or passing away, and giving place to others.

FLUXIBILITY, fluks-e-bil'e-te, s. The quality of admitting fusion.

FLUXIBLE, fluks'e-bl, a. Capable of being melted or fused.

FLUXILITY, fluks-il'e-te, s. (fluxilis, Lat.) The quality of admitting fusion; possibility of being fused or liquified.

FLUXION, fluk'shun, s. The act of flowing; the matter that flows. Fluxions, in Mathematics, a method of calculation which assumes a distinct conception of velocity, both in the case of a uniform and variable motion, and extending this motion of velocity or rate of increase, derived from the consideration of a moving point, to all species of magnitudes, and even to expressions which are purely numerical, as in the formulæ of algebra. Fluxional analysis, is the analysis of fluxions and fluents, distinguishable from the differential calculus by its notation, but in all other respects identical. Calculators by this mode conceive that all finite magnitudes are or may be resolved into infinitely small ones, supposed to be generated by motion, as a line by the motion of a point, a superficies by a line, and a solid by a surface; of which they are the elements, moments, or differences. The art of finding these infinitely small

FOAMLESS, fome'les, a. Having no foam.

FOAMY, fo'me, a. Covered with foam; frothy.

FOB, fob, s. A little pocket for a watch;—v. a. (foppen, Germ.) to cheat; to trick; to impose on; to fob off, to shift off by an artifice; to put aside; to delude.—A vulgar word.

But when I thought the purchas'd liquor mine,
The rascal fob'd me off with only wine.—Addison.

FOCAGE.—See Housebote.

FOCAL, fo'kal, a. (from focus, a fire, Lat.) Belonging to a focus;—s. in Law, the right of taking wood for fuel.

FOCILLATION, fos-sil-la'shun, s. (focillo, I cherish, Lat.) Comfort; support.

FOCUS, fo'kus, s. pl. Focuses or Foci. In Optics, the point at or near which rays are collected by a lens or mirror. Its distance from the lens is called its focal length. In Geometry and Conic Sections, the focus of a parabola is a point in the axis which has this property, that a radius drawn from any point in the curve, makes the same angle with the tangent at that point, that the tangent makes with the axis. In the ellipse, the two foci

Has suit my credit.—Shaks.

FRACTION, frak'shun, s. (fractio, Lat.) 1 of breaking, or state of being broken, especially violence. Fractions, in Arithmetic and Algebra, the part or parts of a unit or whole, expressed by vulgar fractions in figures by two numbers a line between them, as  $\frac{1}{2}$ ,  $\frac{3}{4}$ ,  $\frac{1}{10}$ , and, in fractions, by a period placed before it, as  $18.98 = \frac{1898}{100}$  or  $\frac{1}{100}$ ;  $18.98 = \frac{1898}{100} = \frac{1898}{100}$ . The figure of a vulgar fraction is called its numerator and the under, its denominator. A proper fraction has the numerator less than the denominator and an improper, vice versa. A simple fraction consists of a single numerator and denominator as  $\frac{1}{2}$ , and a compound fraction of two or more simple fractions, as  $\frac{1}{2}$  of  $\frac{1}{3}$ . A complex fraction has both its numerator and denominator

Continued fractions, a continued fraction which has a fraction in its denominator, again has a fraction in its denominator, and such as,

$$\begin{array}{r} 1 \\ 2 + \frac{3}{7 + \frac{5}{2 + \frac{1}{1 + \frac{3}{2}}}} \end{array}$$

Decomposition of fractions, a method used in integral calculus for reducing products of the  $X(x-a)^m(x-b)^n \dots$  in which  $X$  is a rational integral to the sum of terms of the  $K(x-a)^k$ , in which  $K$  is independent of  $x$  if  $X$  be of a higher dimension than  $m+n$  there is also a quotient. Vanishing fractions are termed vanishing in cases where supposition is made which destroys both num inator at the same time. Thus,

$$\frac{\log. x}{x-1}, \quad \frac{ax-a}{bx-b},$$ which assume the form  $\frac{0}{0}$ , when open in fissures and crevices; to have a hiatus; to open the mouth in wonder or surprise; to utter sound with open throat; to open the mouth with hope or expectation; to stare irreverently;

They have gaped upon me with their mouth.—
Job xvi. 10.

to gape for or after, to desire earnestly; to crave; to look and long for; to gape at, in a like sense, is scarcely correct;—s. a gaping. In Conchology, an opening in multivalves and bivalves when the valves are shut, as in the phola, mya, &c.

GAPER, ga'pur, s. One who opens his mouth for wonder, and stares foolishly; one who longs or craves; a yawner.

GAFTOOTHED, gap'toothit, a. Having interstices between the teeth.

GAR, in Saxon, a weapon; as in Edgar, or Eadgar, a happy weapon; Ethelgar, a noble weapon.

GARAGAY, gar'a-gay, s. A bird of the kite kind, a native of Mexico.

GARB, garb, s. (garbe, Fr.) Dress; clothes; habit; fashion or mode of dress; exterior appearance;
looks.

GARBAGE, gar'bij, s. The bowels of an animal; refuse parts of flesh; offal.

Who, without aversion, ever look'd
On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd?— Roscommon.

GARBAGED, gar'bijd, a. Stripped of the bowels.
GARBE, garb, s. (garbs, Sax.) In Heraldry, a sheaf of any kind of grain borne in several coats of arms, and said to represent summer, as a bunch of grapes does autumn.

GARBEL.—See Garboard-streak.

GARBISH. Corrupted from Garbage.

GARBLE, gar'bl, v. a. (garbillar, Span.) To sift or separate the fine or valuable parts of a substance from the useless parts; to separate; to pick; to cull out.

GARBLE, gar'blur, s. One who garbles, sifts, or separates; one who picks out, culls, or selects.
GARBLER, gar'blz, s. pl. The dust, soil, or filth severed from goods, spices, drugs, &c.

GARBOARD, gar'borde, s. The garboard plank in a ship, is the first fastened on the keel on the outside. Garboard streak, the first range or streak of planks laid upon a ship's bottom next to the keel, throughout the whole length of the floor.

GARBOIL, gâr'boyl, s. (garbouil, old Fr.) Disorder; tumult; uproar.—Obsolete.

Give me the number'd verse that Virgil sung,
And Virgil's self shall speak the English tongue;
Manhood and garboils shall be chaunt.—Sp. Hall.

GARCINIA, gâr-sin'e-a, s. (in honour of Laurence Garcin, M.D., a French botanist.) A genus of plants, consisting of trees with hermaphrodite or monœcious flowers, usually solitary at the tops of the branches. The fruit of G. mangostana is esteemed the most delicious of the fruits of the East Indies, and G. cambogia yields the well-known pigment Gamboge.

GARD.—See Guard and Ward.

GARDANT, gârd'ant, s. In Heraldry, a word GAURDANT, denoting any beast full-faced, and looking right forward.

GARDEN, gâr'dn, s. (garten, Germ. jardia, Fr.) A piece of ground appropriated to the cultivation of herbs or plants, fruits and flowers; a rich, well-cultivated spot or tract of country; a delightful spot. In Composition, garden is used adjectively, as in garden-mould, garden-tillage. Garden-balsam, the plant Justicia pectoralis. Garden-cress, the plant Lepidium sativum, cultivated in gardens for the young leaves, which are used in salads, and have a peculiarly warm and grateful relish. Garden-mould, mould fit for a garden. Garden-pink, the Dianthus plumarius, the flowers of which are either double or single, white, purple, spotted, or variegated, and more or less fringed on the margin, and are sweet-scented. The florists of Paisley reckon about three hundred varieties of this beautiful flower as cultivated by themselves. Garden-plot, plantation laid out in a garden. Garden-rocket, the plant Eruca sativa, or Brassica eruca of Smith. Garden-tillage, tillage used in cultivating gardens. Garden-weare, the produce of gardens;—(this compound is obsolete;)

—v. n. to lay out or to cultivate a garden.

GARDENER, gâr'dn-ur, s. One whose occupation is to attend to the cultivation and dressing of a garden. Gardeners' garters, a name given to a plant which used to be common in gardens, the striped variety (versicolor) of Arundo donax.

GARDENIA, gâr-de-ne-a, s. (in honour of Alexander Garden, M.D., of Charleston, Carolina.) A genus of plants, consisting of trees or shrubs, with opposite leaves, and white, usually sweet-scented, flowers; Order, Cinchonaceæ.

GARDENING, gâr'dn-ing, s. The art of forming and cultivating garden grounds, whether for ornamental or culinary purposes.

GARDENLESS, gâr'dn-less, a. Destitute of a garden.

GARDNERIA, gârd-ne're-a, s. (in honour of the Hon. Edward Gardner.) A genus of climbing East Indian shrubs, with opposite leaves and white flowers; Order, Strychnaceæ.

GARDOQUIA, gâr-do'kwe-a, s. (in honour of Don Diego Gardoqui, Minister of Finance under Charles IV. of Spain.) A genus of branching shrubs, with beautiful flowers, generally of a scarlet-colour; Order, Lamiaceæ.

GARE, gare, s. A coarse wool growing on the legs of sheep.

GARFISH, gâr'fish, s. The Esox velone of Lin-næus; the genus Ramphistoma of Swainson.—Which see.

GARGANINE, gâr'ga-neen, s. An extract of madder by means of sulphuric acid, prepared in France.

GARGARISM, gâr'ga-rizm, s. (gargarismus, Lat.) A gargle; any liquid preparation used to wash the mouth and throat.

GARGARIZE, gâr'ga-rize, v. a. (gargariser, Fr.) To wash or rinse the mouth with any medicated liquor.

GARGET, gâr'get, s. A distemper in cattle, consisting in a swelling of the throat and the adjoining parts.

GARGIL, gâr'gil, s. A distemper affecting the head of geese, which often proves fatal.

GARGLE, gâr'gl, v. a. (gargouiller, Fr.) To wash the throat and mouth with a liquid preparation, which is kept from descending into the stomach by a gentle expiration of air; to warble; to play in the throat;—(improper in the last two significations;)

Those which only warble long,
And pruple in their throats a song.—Waller.

—s. a liquid preparation for cleansing the mouth and throat.

GARGLION, gâr'gle-un, s. An exudation of nervous juice from a bruise, which indurates into a tumour.

GARGOL, gâr'gol, s. A distemper in swine.

GARGOYLE, gâr'goyl, s. In Architecture, a projecting water-spout, attached to some old house, often grotesquely carved.

GARIDELLA, ga-re-del'la, s. (in honour of Pierre Garidel, M.D., a French botanist of the beginning of the eighteenth century.) A genus of small, slender, erect, inconspicuous herbs, with small white flowers; Order, Ranunculaceæ.

GARISH, ga'rish, a. (gearwian, Sax.) Gaudy; showy; fine; affectedly fine; tawdry; extravagantly gay; flighty.

GARISHLY, ga'rish-le, ad. In a gaudy, showy manner.

GARISHNESS, ga'rish-nes, s. Finery; flashing gaudiness; affected or ostentatious show; flighty or extravagant show.

GARLAND, gâr'land, s. (guirland, Fr.) A wreath or chaplet made of branches or flowers, and sometimes studded with precious stones, to be worn on the head like a crown; the top; the principal thing, or thing most prized.

And call him noble that was now your hate,
Him vile that was your garland.—Shaks.

In Architecture, a band of ornamented work around the top of a tower, &c. In Literature, a collection of little printed pieces. In a ship, a sort of net used by sailors instead of a locker or cupboard. Shot garland, a piece of timber nailed horizontally along the ship's side, from one gunport to another, and filled with several hemispherical cavities, to contain the round shot, ready for charging the great guns during an engagement;—v. a. to deck with a garland.

GARLAND FLOWER.—See Hedychium.

GARLANDLESS, gâr'land-less, a. Without any garland.

GARLIC, gâr'lik, s. (garlec, or garleac, Sax.) The English name of the Allium, of which there are many species. That cultivated in England is the great round-headed A. apelosyrum. Garlepear.—See Cratæva.

ER, gár-lik-e'tur, s. A low fellow.

You that stood so much on the voice of occupation, and breath of gálic-eaters.—Shaks.

gar'ment, s. (garnament, Norm.) Any clothing by which the body is covered; in the plural, denotes clothing in general.
granur, s. (grenier, Fr.) A granary; a place where grain is stored for preservance, a. to store in a granary.

granet, s. (grenat, Fr. granato, Ital.) A gemstone found in dodecahedrons, in micangst the oldest or primary rocks in s of the world. It is of a beautiful red sometimes with shades of yellow or blue.
In the kingdom of Pegu are most esteemed, supposed that this was the carbuncle of the East. It is harder than quartz, and consists of equal parts of silex, alumine, and iron, with traces of manganese. Common varieties are more opaque, of a duller colour, and than the precious garnet, though harder than. They are abundant in similar localities all countries, sometimes constituting whole mass of a rock;—a sort of tackle the mainstay of a ship, and used in hoisting in and out, at the time of landing ring her. Cross garnets, a species of in the most common works, formed in of the letter T turned thus T; the upper part fastened to the jamb of the doorcase, horizontal part to the door or shutter.

gar'nish, v. a. (garnir, Fr.) To adorn; to furnish; to set off; to fit with (a cant term);—to furnish; to supply; to garnish; something added for embellishment. In Gaols, fetters—(a cant term) Law, money which, previous to the Geo. IV. c. 43, sect. 10, v. 23, used to be paid to a prisoner on his entry into gaol;—
a gar'nish.

gar'nish-e', s. In Law, a third person in whose hands money is attached liberties of the city of London, by process of the sheriff's court; so called because he hath no interest or warning not to pay the money due, but to appear and answer to the creditor's suit.—Cowel; Blount.

gar'nish-ur, s. One who decorates.
gar'nish-ing, } s. That which gar*ment*, } nishes; ornament;
gar'nish-ment, } gar'nish-ment. In Law, a warning or notice given to appear in court or give information; a gar'nish-ment or warning is given to a third person whose hands money is attached within the liberties of the city of London, by process outing of the sheriff's court. This third person is called a gar'nish-ur.

gar'ne-ture, s. Ornamental appendage; furniture; dress.
gar'rus, a. (garum, pickle, Lat.) Resembles made of fish.

gar'run, s. (garron, Irish.) A diminutive horse; a highland horse; a hack;

gar'ret, s. (guerite, Fr.) The upper chamber, taken either partially or wholly regular space within the roof.

gar'ret-ed, a. Protected by turrets.

GARRETEER, gar-ret-ee', s. One who occupies a garret; a poor author.

To pen with garreteers, obscure and shabby, Inscriptive nonsense in a fancied abbey.—
Parnassus of Literature.

GARRISON, gar're-sn, s. (garnison, Fr.) A body of troops stationed in a fort or fortified town; a fort, castle, or fortified town, furnished with troops to defend it; the state of being placed in a fortification for its defence;—v. a. to place troops in a fortress for its defence; to furnish with soldiers; to secure or defend by fortresses manned with troops.

GARROT, gar'rot, s. (French.) In Surgery, a small cylinder of wood, employed to tighten the circular band by which the artery of a limb is compressed, for the purpose of suspending the blood in hemorrhage from amputation or otherwise.

GARROTE, gar-ro'te', s. A mode of inflicting capital punishment in Spain by means of a collar, which is tightly screwed round the neck of the criminal while seated with his back to an upright board, to which is affixed the fatal apparatus.

GARRULINÆ, gar'ru-lin-e, s. The Jays, a subfamily of the Corvidæ, or Crows; stature rather smaller than the crows, and less robust in form; feet formed for grasping; the lateral toes unequal;
colours bright.

GARRULITY, gar-ru'le-te, s. (garrulitas, Lat.) Loquacity; talkativeness; the practice or habit of talking much; a tattling or babbling.

GARRULOUS, gar'ru-lus, a. Talkative; prating.

GARRULOUSLY, gar'ru-lus-le, ad. In a loquacious, babbling manner.

GARRULUS, gar'ru-lus, s. (garrulus, chattering, Lat.) The Jay, a genus of birds belonging to the Garrulinæ, or Jays: Family, Corvidæ.

GARRYA, gar're-a, s. (in honour of Nicholas Garry, secretary to the Hudson Bay Company.) A genus of plants: Type of the order Garryaceæ.

GARRYACEÆ, gar-re-a'se-e, s. (garrya, one of the genera.) A natural order of declivous Exogens, consisting of shrubs with opposite leaves, without stipules; the flowers disposed in amentaceous racemes within connate bracts; unisexual; sepals four; stamens four; calyx superior and two-toothed; ovary one-celled; two setaceous styles; two pendulous ovules; pericarp berried, two-seeded, and indehiscent; inhabitants of the West Indies; the Garryaceæ or Garryade, and Helwingi-aceæ, form what Lindley calls the Garryales, or Garryal alliance of his Vegetable Kingdom.

GARTER, gar'tur, s. (jarretiere, Fr.) A string or band used to tie a stocking to the leg. In Heraldry, the moiety or half of a bend. Order of the garter, a military order of knighthood, the most noble and ancient of any lay order in the world, instituted by Edward III. The companions of the knights are mostly princes and peers; and the King of England is the chief of the order.
The number of knights was originally twenty-six;
but six were added in 1786, on account of the increase of the royal family. They are a college or corporation, having a great and little seal.
Their officers are a prelate, chancellor, registrar, knight-at-arms, and usher of the black rod. They have also a dean and twelve canons, and petty canons, vergers, and twenty-six pensioners or poor knights;—v. a. to bind with a garter; to invest with the order of the garter.

GARTERFISH, gär'tur-fish, s. A fish having a long depressed body like the blade of a sword; the Lepidopus.

GARTERSNAKE, gär'tur-snake, s. The name given to a species of the American serpent; the Coluber sirtalis.

GARTH, gärth, s. (garz, Welsh.) A dam or wear for catching fish; a close; a yard; a croft; a garden.—Local, if not obsolete in the last four significations.

GARTHMAN, gärth'man, s. In old statutes, the owner of an open wear where fish are taken.

GARUGA, ga-roo'ga, s. (the East Indian name.) A genus of plants, consisting of trees with impari-pinnate leaves, and yellowish flowers in axillary panicles.

GARUM, ga'rum, s. (garos, a small fish, Gr.) A sauce or pickle used by the ancients, and composed of the fluid which exudes from the body and ova of salted and half-putrid fish, and afterwards strongly aromatized.

GAS, gas, s. (gaz, Fr.) In Chemistry, a body, the constituent particles of which have been so expanded by heat as to become aeriform. Gas is distinguished from steam or vapour by this circumstance, that vapours are raised from all fluids by heat, and are again condensed by cold into the same fluid form; but gases are obtained from the substances containing them only by chemical decomposition, whether this be spontaneous or artificial. They are either not condensable, or only so when submitted to an excessive pressure or degree of cold. Four of the gases are simple substances: oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, and chlorine. The rest are more or less compound, as carbonic acid gas is a compound of oxygen and carbon; sulphurous gas, of sulphur and oxygen, &c. Gases are mostly colourless; nitrous acid gas, however, is red; chlorine and its prot and deutoxide are of a yellowish green; the hydrochloric, hydriodic, fluoboric, and fluo-silicic produce white fumes in the air, and iodine violet-coloured fumes when heated. The gases which are inflammable are hydrogen, and all its compounds; carbonous oxide, and cyanogen. Those which more or less support combustion are oxygen, protoxide of nitrogen, chlorine, and its oxides. Some gases are destitute of smell; others have an odour which is insupportable, and often characteristic. In their properties many of the gases are acid; some neutral; two alkaline. The following Qualitative Analyses of Gases, taken from Graham's 'Elements of Chemistry,' exhibits the distinctive properties of oxygen, nitrogen, protoxide of nitrogen, deutoxide of nitrogen, hydrogen, carbonic oxide, and carbonic acid:—

GASES.

Soluble in water, . . .	Carbonic acid: solution disturbs lime-water.
Do. . . . .	Protoxide of nitrogen: does not.
Support combustion, .	Oxygen.
Do. . . . .	Protoxide of nitrogen.
Combustible, . . . . .	Carbonic oxide: product of combustion disturbs lime-water.
Do. . . . .	Hydrogen: does not.
Extinguish combustion,	Deutoxide of nitrogen: forms brown fumes with oxygen.
Do. . . . .	Nitrogen: does not.

Gas, (Portable,) coal gas, which, after its manufacture, is compressed by a condensing or force pump into strong vessels prepared to receive it. These vessels being portable, the gas may then be used where required, at any distance from the gas works. Gas apparatus, the furnaces, retorts, pipes, valves, purifying machine, lime machine, gasometers, gas meters, governors, &c., used in the manufacture, the purifying, and the supply of gases, particularly of coal gas, as used for illumination. Gas-burner, the jet or contrivance fixed to the end of a gas pipe for the purpose of separating the flame, or, in other words, for the division of the stream of gas into more minute streams, that its light may be more diffused. Gas governor, a kind of gas meter, adopted in gas works, for equalizing the pressure of gas previous to its issuing from the gasometer for the supply of light, as well as the inequalities arising from putting on the lights at different periods of the night. Gas-holder, an instrument invented by Mr. Pepps, for holding such gases as are usually made the subject of experiment, or for the purposes of the chemist.—See Gasometer. Gas hydraulic main, the large pipe or tube into which the tubes leading from the various retorts are fixed, and which conveys the gas to the tar vessel or cistern in which it is cooled and purified from any uncomposed tar. It is called the hydraulic main because of its being partly filled with water. Gas hydraulic valve, or gasholder valve, the name given to the principal communication between the gasometer or gasholder, and the principal pipe leading to the mains. Gas jars, glass jars for the holding of the gases during the progress of experiments. Gas light, the light afforded by the combustion of carburetted hydrogen gas, as prepared by the distillation of coal, oil, tar, &c.; therefore called coal gas, oil gas, &c. Gas liquor, the liquid remaining in the various parts of the apparatus of gas works, after the manufacture of gas. Gas main, the principal pipes which conduct the gas from the gas works to the place where it is to be consumed. Gas meter, a simple but ingenious mechanical contrivance, the design of which is to measure and record the quantity of gas passing through a pipe in any given time. Gas purifier, purifying machine, or lime machine, a vessel into which the coal gas enters from the retorts, after passing through the vessel of cold water into which it first enters. Gas register, a simple instrument for indicating and registering the impurities of coal gas, and also the times when they occur. Gas regulating valve, a valve which is sometimes used instead of, or in addition to the gas governor. Gas retort, a vessel used for holding the coal or other material of which gas of any kind is to be made. Gas transfer, a small instrument invented by Mr. Pepps, for the conveyance of a small quantity of gas from one vessel to another. Gas water, water through which the common gas made at the gas works passes. It is impregnated with hydro-sulphuric and hydro-bisulphuric acid of lime. Gas works, the manufactory at which coal gas is made for public purposes, together with the whole machinery and apparatus, are included under the term gas works.

GASCON, gas'kon, s. A native of Gascony in France.

gas-ko-na-de', s. (from Gascon, an f Gascony, the people of which are e been great boasters.) A boast; a bragging or boasting; a vaunt; made to please me, that you said your ceased to one hundred a-year since 1 ast; to vaunt; to brag; to bluster.

gas-ko-na-dur', s. A great boaster.

gas-us, a. In the form of gas, or an d.

r. a. (supposed to be from hacher, to see, Fr.) To make a gash, or long t, applied chiefly to incisions in flesh; and long cut; an incision of consider-ab-fal', a. Full of gashes; hideous.

gas-e-fe-ka-shun', s. The act or inverting into gas.

-fi, v. a. (gas, and facio, I make, Lat.) into gas or an aeriform fluid by comcoloric.

kit, s. (cazeta, Span.) A plaited cord the sail-yards of a ship, and used to up the sail firmly to the yard. Bunt which supports or ties up the bunt of d should be the strongest, as having weight to support. Quarter gasket, r large sails, and fastened about half on the yard. Yard-arm gasket, is the yard-arm, and serves to bind the

as the quarter gasket on large yards, quite into the bunt of small sails.

kinz, s. pl. Galligaskins; wide open gas-som'e-tur, s. (gaz, Fr. and metron, Gr.) A large cylindrical apparatus of opper, &c., so constructed as to hold the same time, to enable a person to be quantity collected. It is formed of one fitting loosely within the other;

ne being open at the top, the inner one

gas-som'e-tre, s. The science, art, or measuring gases; also, the nature and f these elastic fluids.

a. (gasper, Dan.) To open the mouth thing the breath, or in laborious respin the case of a person dying; to long used in the last sense:—v. a. to emit opening wide the mouth;—s. the act of mouth to catch the breath; the short breath in the agonies of death.

) v. a. To terrify; to make tur, } aghast; to frighten.—Obsolete.

ther gasted by the noise I made,

ddenly he fled.—Shaks.

s of the lady has gaster'd him.—

Beau. de Flct.

MPHRAXIS, gas-tur-a'je-em-frak'sis, s.

o, I strangle, emphraxia, obstruc-

Obstruction of the pylorus.

a, gas-tur-a'je-a, s. (gaster, the belly,

Gr.) Pain in the stomach or bowels.

as-te-re-a, s. (gaster, a belly, Gr.) A ants: Order, Hemerocallidaceæ.

ACHUS, gas-tur-o-brang'kus, s. (gas- mychia, gills, Gr.) A subgenus of

GASTEROCHILINA, gas-tur-o-ke'na, s. (gaster, and chilino, I gape, Gr.) A genus of Mollusca, inhabiting a clavate calcareous tube, divided for nearly half its length by an internal ridge, which forms a double aperture on the other or thick extremity, enclosing an ovate bivalve shell, gaping very widely, anteriorly, and having a linear and marginal hinge, and no teeth.

GASTEROCHILVE.—See Saccolobium.

GASTEROMYCETES, gas-tur-o-mi'se-tis, s. (gaster, a belly, and mykes, a mushroom, Gr.) A tribe or order of Fungi, in which the hymenium is entirely closed in a pericardium, and the spores generally quaternate on distinct sporophores.

GASTERONEMA, gas-tur-o-ne-ma, s. (gaster, and nema, a filament, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Amaryllidaceæ.

GASTROPELICUS, gas-tur-o-pe'l'e-kus, s. (gaster, and pelikos, how large, Gr.) A genus of fishes, belonging to the Salmoninæ, or Salmon: Family, Salmonidæ.

GASTROPLAX, gas'tur-o-plaks, s. (gaster, and plax, a flat or plain, Gr.) A genus of gastropod Mollusca, the body of which is large and circular, and carrying a shell which is stony, flat, irregularly rounded, and thickest in the middle, with trencant edges, and marked with slightly concentric striae.

GASTROPODA, gas-te-rop'o-da, } s. (gaster, the belly, and pous, the foot, Gr.) The third class of Mollusca; they have the head free; they crawl upon the belly, or upon a fleshy disk, situated under the belly, which serves them as feet. They are univalvular or multivalvular, but in no case bivalvular. The back is furnished with a mantle which is more or less extended, takes various forms, and, in the greater number of genera, produces a shell. The tentacula are very small, situated above the mouth, and do not surround it, varying in number from two to six; sometimes they are wanting altogether. The eyes are very small, and sometimes wanting. Several are entirely naked; others have merely a concealed shell, but most of them are furnished with one that is large enough to receive and shelter them. Most of the aquatic gastropoda, with a spiral shell, have an operculum, a part sometimes horny, sometimes calcareous, attached to the posterior part of the foot, which closes the shell when its occupant is withdrawn into it and folded up. The limax or slug is an example of the class. Cuvier divides this class of Mollusca into nine orders—namely, 1. the Pulmonea; 2. the Nudibranchiata; 3. the Inferobranchiata; 4. the Tectibranchiata; 5. the Heteropoda; 6. the Pectinibranchiata; 7. the Tubulibranchiata; 8. the Sentibranchiata; 9. the Cyclobranchiata.

GASTROPODIUM, gas-tur-o-po'de-um, s. (gaster, and pous, the foot or root, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Orchidaceæ.

GASTROPTERON, gas-tur-op'te-run, s. (gaster, and pteron, a wing or fin, Gr.) A genus of Mollusca, having the body short and ovate, and the margins of the foot dilated into broad winglike lobes; the branchia naked, and placed on the right side of the body, without a shell.

GASTEROSTEUS, gas-tur-os'te-us, s. (gaster, the belly, Gr. and os, a bone, Lat. from its ventral fins being represented by spines.) A genus of fishes, belonging to the Aulostominae, or Sticklebacks: Family, Zeidae.

GASTROTHALAMÆE—GASTRICOLE.

GELATINE, jel'a-tine, s. (gelatin, Ital.) An animal substance, obtained by boiling with water the soft and solid parts, as the muscles, cartilages, bones, tendons, &c.; when cooled, gelatine is capable of assuming an elastic or tremulous consistence, but, on the application of heat, is reduced to a liquid. The coarser forms of gelatine obtained from hoofs, hides, &c., are called glue; that from the skin and finer membranes, size; and when obtained from air-bladders and other membranes of fish, isinglass. Gelatine does not exist as such in the animal tissues, but is formed by the action of long continued boiling. When acted on by sulphuric acid, it yields gelatine sugar, or glycicoll, the formula of which is  $C_8 H_7 N_2 O_5 2HO$ . According to Scherer, the formula of gelatinous tissue is  $C_{48} H_{41} N_7 O_{18}$ . Blood cannot be formed from gelatine, and animals which feed exclusively on it soon die of starvation. The reason is, it does not contain proteine: also written Gelatin.

GEOCENTRIC, je-o-sen'trik, a. (ge, and centros, a centre, Gr.) In Astronomy, having the earth for a centre, as the moon. The planets moving round the sun as a centre, are not geocentric; yet we speak of their geocentric places, latitudes, longitudes, &c., meaning thereby, as they appear when viewed from the earth's centre.

GEOCHORDA, je-o-kawrd'a, s. (ge, the earth, and chorde, a cord, Gr. in reference to the whiplike creeping stems.) A genus of plants: Order, Scrophulariaceae.

GEOCOLAPTES, je-o-ko-lap'tes, s. (ge, and colaptes, a cognate genus of birds.) A genus of birds, natives of Africa: Family, Picidae.

GEOCORISÆ, je-o-kawr'e-se, s. (ge, and corisæoi, I caress, Gr.) A family of Hemipterous insects in which the antennæ are larger than the head, and inserted between the eyes, near their internal margin. There are three joints in the tarsi, the first of which is sometimes very short.

GEOCYCLIC, je-o-si'klik, a. Circling the earth periodically.

GEODEA, ge-o'de-a, s. A free, fleshy, tuberiform polypifer, hollow and empty, and firm when dry; the out surface being all over porous, and one side having a separate circular area, pierced with large pores.

GEODES, je'odze, s. (geodes, earthy, Gr.) A kind of atites, the hollow of which, instead of a module, contains only loose earth, and is commonly lined with crystals.

GEODESIA, je-o-de'zhe-a, s. (ge, and daio, I divide, Gr.) That part of geometry and trigonometry which applies to the measuring of whole countries, or very large tracts of land, or to the admeasurement of a degree of the meridian. Originally, the term geodesia was considered synonymous with land-surveying.

GEODESIC, je-o-des'sik, } a. Relating to GEODESICAL, je-o-des'ic-kal, } geodesy.

GEODESY.—See Geodesia.

GEODETIC, je-o-det'ik, } a. Relating to the GEODETICAL, je-o-det'e-kal, } art of measuring surfaces.

GEODIFEROUS, je-o-dif'fer-us, a. (geode, and fero, I bear, Lat.) Producing geodes.

GEODORUM, je-o-do'rum, s. (ge, the earth, and doron, a gift, Gr. in reference to the beauty of the flowers lying on the earth.) A genus of handsome plants: Order, Orchidaceæ.

GEOGLOSSUM, je-o-glos'sum, s. (ge, the earth, and glossa, a tongue, Gr.) Earth-tongue, a genus of Fungi, found in bogs and meadows: Tribe, Hymenomyces.

GEOGNOST, je-og'nost, s. One versed in geognosy; a geologist.

GEOGNOSTIC, je-og-nos'tik, a. Relating to a knowledge of the structure of the earth; geological.

GEOGNOSEY, je-og'no-se, s. (ge, the earth, and gnosis, knowledge, Gr.) That part of natural history which treats of the structure of the earth. This term is of German origin, and is nearly synonymous with geology; some writers have maintained, however, that it is less comprehensive in its meaning, and view it as only a branch of that science.

GEOGONIC, je-o-gon'ik, a. Relating to geogony.

GEOGONY, je-og'o-ne, s. (ge, and gone, birth, Gr.) The doctrine of the formation of the earth.

GEOGRAPHER, je-og'ra-fur, s. (ge, and grapho, I write, Gr.) One who describes that part of the globe or earth which is exhibited on the surface; one intimately versant in geography, or who compiles a treatise on the subject.

GEOGRAPHIC, je-o-graf'fik, } a. Relating to,
GEOGRAPHICAL, je-o-graf'e-kal, } or containing a description of the terraqueous globe; pertaining to geography.

GEOGRAPHICALLY, je-o-graf'e-kal-le, ad. In a geographical manner.

GEOGRAPHY, je-og'gra-fe, s. A description of the earth or terrestrial globe, particularly of its natural and artificial divisions, and of the position of the several countries, kingdoms, states, cities, &c., which chequer its surface. Geography also includes the doctrine or knowledge of the astronomical circles or divisions of the sphere, by which the relative position of places on the globe may be ascertained, and usually some account of the government, religion, and peculiar characteristics, which distinguish the several nations and tribes of people from each other;—a book containing a description of the earth.

GEOLOGICAL, je-o-loj'e-kal, a. Relating to geology, or the science of the structure of the earth or terraqueous globe.

GEOLOGIST, je-o-lo-jist, s. One versed in the science of geology.

GEOLOGIZE, je-o-lo-jize, v. n. To make geological investigations and discoveries; to study geology.

GEOLOGY, je-o-lo-je, s. (ge, the earth, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) That branch of natural science which treats of the structure of the earth, and the nature and causes of the phenomena which it presents, whether effected by mechanical, chemical, or vital agency. It is the history of the bypast conditions of our planet, as elucidated in the monuments of change which manifest themselves on the surface, and under the surface of the earth.

It classifies, by means of these monuments, the various rocks according to their comparative ages, and the remains of organic beings found embedded therein, and treats of the various races of animals and plants which characterize the different formations or systems which have been deposited by water in the long lapse of countless ages. The following is a brief summary of the grand divisions into which the aqueous systems have been classed: 1. Recent deposits of clay, sand, gravel, limestones, &c., from existing rivers, lakes, &c., formed during the historical era, sometimes containing the remains of man or of his works. 2. Tertiary, or Supracretaceous Formations, composed chiefly of clays, sands, gravels, and limestones, containing a mixture of extinct and recent animal remains, and distinguished by the presence of those of numerous Mammalia, extinct and recent. 3. Secondary Formations, consisting of the chalk, green sand, oolite, lias, new red sandstone, with their subordinate beds, all abounding in organic remains, chiefly marine—all extinct. 4. Carboniferous System, consisting of the Coal Formation, carboniferous or mountain limestone,—organic remains—all extinct. 5. The Devonian or Old Red Sandstone System, consisting of sandstones, often red, cornstones, and shales, with extinct fishes, &c. 6. The Silurian System, the upper and lower consisting of sandstones, often micaceous, limestones, abounding in the oldest types of organic life, and slates. 7. Primary Formations, consisting of schists of various kinds, limestones, graywacke, mica slate, gneiss, &c., a few organic remains in the newest beds only. Igneous rocks of many sorts, such as granite, porphyry, greenstone, basalt, and traps of various kinds, produced at different eras, occur in each system.

GEOMANCER, je'o-man-sur, s. (ge, the earth, and manteia, divination, Gr.) One who divines or foretells events, by means of lines, figures, or points, on the ground, or on paper.

GEOMANCY, je'o-man-se, s. A kind of divination by the aid of lines or figures, formed by little dots or points, either on the earth or on paper, and representing the four elements, the cardinal points, the planetary bodies, &c.; this alleged science had taken root in the days of Chaucer, and was actually cultivated by Dryden.

GEOMANTIC—GEOMYS.

GEONOMA—GEOTROCHUS.

GEOMANTIC, je-o-man'tik, a. Relating to geomancy.

GEOMETER, je-om'e-tur, s. (ge, and metron, a measure, Gr.) One skilled in geometry.—See Geometrician, which is generally used.

GEOMETRAL, je-om'e-tral, a. (French.) Relating to geometry.

GEOMETRIA, je-o-met're-a, s. The Looper Moths, a Linnæan genus of the nocturnal Lepidoptera: Family, Phalaenidæ.

GEOMETRIC, je-o-met'trik, } a. (geometrikos, GEOMETRICAL, je-o-met'tre-kal, } Gr.) Pertaining to geometry; according to the rules or principles of geometry; done by geometry.

Geometrical elevation, in Architecture, a design for any part of a building drawn according to the rules of geometry, as opposed to the perspective or natural elevation. If of sufficient size to guide the working builder, it is called the working plan or drawing. Geometrical pace, a measure of five feet. Geometrical plane, in Perspective, the same as ground plane. Geometrical progression and proportion, a series of numbers is said to be in geometrical progression when they have a common ratio or multiplier; thus, multiply 1 by 2, and the number produced by 2 again, and the second result by 2, the numbers resulting will consequently be in geometrical progression. The series will, of course, be 1, 2, 4, 8, 16, 32. Geometrical solution, that result which is obtained from the simple principles of geometry. Geometrical staircase, a staircase is so called when the stairs are supported only by being inserted into the wall at one end, with a continued range of balusters at the other.

GEOMETRICALLY, je-o-met'tre-kal-le, ad. According to the rules or laws of geometry.

GEOMETRICIAN, je-om-e-trish'an, s. One skilled in geometry.

GEOMETRIZE, je-om'e-trize, v. a. To act according to the laws of geometry; to perform geometrically.

GEOMETRY, je-om'e-tre, s. (ge, and metron, a measure, Gr.) The science which explains the proportions, properties, and measurement of lines and surfaces. Geometry is divided into several parts, as elementary, which describes right lines, figures, and the properties of the circle; the propositions of which part is called theoretic when anything is to be proved, and practical when anything is to be done. There is also the geometry of the compass, which is a part of the science, the practice of which is entirely performed by the aid of the compasses only. Descriptive geometry is a name given to that part of practical geometry which ascertains the inclination and particular form of the lines produced by curved surfaces cutting each other; as, for example, in groined and vaulted ceilings, &c.: the higher or transcendental geometry is that which treats of the higher order of curves and problems.

GEOMITRA, je-om'e-tra, s. (ge, and mitra, a band or girdle, Gr.) A genus of Mollusca, belonging to the Helicina, or common land-snails, the shell of which is conic, thick, and obtuse; the whorls striated and coronated with tubercles; the body whorl small; the aperture very small and circular; the lips united; the outer one thin; umbellous small: Family, Helicidæ.

GEOMYS, je'o-mis, s. (ge, and mys, a rat, Gr.) The Canada Hamster, a genus of burrowing Rodents, about the size of a rat—natives of North America.

GEONOMA, je-o'no-ma, s. (geonomos, distributing lands, Gr.) A genus of plants, consisting of an ornamental palm-tree, G. pinnatifrons: Order, Palmaceæ.

GEOPELIA, je-o-pe'le-a, s. (ge, and peleia, the wood-pigeon, Gr.) A genus of birds, allied to the dove: Family, Columbidae.

GEOPHILA, je-of'e-la, s. (ge, the earth, and phileo, I love, Gr.) A genus of creeping plants: Order, Cinchonaceæ.

GEOPONIC, je-o-pon'ik, a. (ge, and ponos, labour, Gr.) Relating to agriculture, or the tillage of the earth.

GEOPONICS, je-o-pon'iks, s. The art or science of cultivating the ground; agriculture.

GEORAMA, je-o-ra'ma, s. (ge, the earth, and orama, view, Gr.) An ingenious invention, of French origin, for exhibiting a very complete view of the different seas, lakes, rivers, and mountains on the earth's surface. It is formed in the shape of a hollow sphere of forty feet diameter, by thirty-six bars of iron, representing the parallels and meridians.

GEORCHIS, je-awr'kis, s. (ge, the earth, Gr. and orchis.) A genus of plants: Order, Orchidaceæ.

GEORGE, jawr', s. A figure of St. George on horseback, worn by knights of the garter; a brown loaf.—The origin of the latter signification is not well ascertained.

Cubb'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid,
On a brown george, with lousy swobbers, fed—Dryden.

GEORGE-NOBLE, jawr'no-bl, s. A gold coin in the time of Henry VIII., of the value of six shillings and eightpence sterling.

GEORGIC, jawr'jik, s. (georgikos, Gr.) A rural poem; a poetical composition on the subject of husbandry, containing rules for the cultivation of the land in a poetical dress.

GEORGIC, jawr'jik, } a. Relating to rural and GEORGICAL, jawr'je-kal, } agricultural affairs.

GEORGINA.—See Dahlia.

GEORGIUM SIDUS.—See Uranus.

GEORISSUS, je-o-ris'sus, s. (ge, and ris, the nest, Gr.?) A genus of Coleopterous insects, with the antennæ terminating in a round club: Family, Clavicornes.

GEORYCHUS, je-o-re'kus, s. (ge, and orchys, digging, Gr.) The Lemmings, a genus of gnawing quadrupeds, allied to the rat and mouse, and having the toes formed for digging; the tail and ears are very short: Order, Rodentia.

GEOSAURUS, je-o-saw'rus, s. (ge, and saurus, a lizard, Gr.) A name given by Cuvier to a fossil Saurian, considered as intermediate in its structure between the Crocodiles and the Monitors.

GEOSCOPY, je-os'ko-pe, s. (ge, and skopeo, I view, Gr.) A knowledge of the earth, ground, or soil, gained by an examination of its nature and qualities.

GEOSITTA, je-o-sit'ta, s. (ge, the earth, and sitta, a cognate genus.) A genus of birds, belonging to the Sittinæ, or Nuthatches: Family, Certhiidae.

GEOTIC, je-ot'ik, a. (from ge, the earth, Gr.) Belonging to the earth; terrestrial.

GEOTROCHUS, je-o-trok'us, s. (ge, and trochos, a boy's top, Gr.) A genus of Mollusca, the shell of which is trochiform; the body whorl more or less carinated; the spore pointed and acute; the outer lip thickened and reflected; the inner lip and umbilicus almost obsolete.

GEOTRUPE, je-o'trū-pe, s. (ge, and trupane, a borer, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Scarabæidæ.

GEOVULA, je-ov'u-la, s. (ge, and ovula, a cognate genus.) A genus of Mollusca, the shell of which is oval; the spire very short, turbinated, and cancellated, with an obtuse apex; the outer lip thickened internally; the inner lip with a strong plate near the base: Family, Turbidæ.

GERANACEÆ, jer-a-na'se-æ, s. (geranium, one of the genera.) A natural order of Thalamifloral Exogens, consisting of herbaceous plants or shrubs, with tumid stems and opposite or alternate leaves, often stipulate; sepals five; petals five; stamens hypogynous, and twice or three times the number of the petals; ovary composed of five paces each, one-celled and one-seeded; styles five, and cohering round an elevated axis; fruit formed of five pieces.

GERANIUM, je-ra'ne-um, s. (geranos, a crane, Gr. from the long beak which terminates the carpels, resembling the bill of a crane.) A genus of herbs, or subshrubs, with palmate-lobed leaves, and one or two flowered peduncles, bearing usually flowers of great beauty and of various colours: Order, Geraniaceæ.

GERARDIA, ge-rârd'e-a, s. (in honour of John Gerard, author of an Herbal, published in 1597.) A genus of plants, consisting of American herbs or undershrubs, with yellow or rosy-purple flowers: Order, Scrophulariaceæ.

GERBILUS, jer-bil'us, s. The Tamarisk gerboa, a genus of Rodents, having the tail long, and covered with fur—natives of Africa and India only.

GERENT, je'rent, a. (gerens, Lat.) Carrying; bearing.

GERFALCON.—See Hierfalcon.

GERM, jerm, s. (germen, Lat.) Origin; first principle; that from which anything springs. Germ or Germen, in Botany, the name for the ovary; germen-inferior, having the fruit below the flower; germen-superior, having the fruit above the flower.

GERMAN, jer'man, s. (from germanus, a brother, Lat.) In Law, whole or entire, as respects genealogy or descent; thus, brother-german is a brother by both the same father and mother. Cousins-german are those of the first and second degree, i. e., children of brothers or sisters. German catchfly, or rock lychnis, the common name of the plant Viscaria vulgaris, a native of Britain. German greens, a variety of a plant of the cabbage tribe, much used in Scotland as a potherb. German madwort.—See Asperugo. German millet, the produce of the plant, Setaria germanica: Order, Graminaceæ;—a. related;—(obsolete in the last sense;)

belonging to Germany;—s. a native of Germany, and, by ellipsis, the German language.

GERMANDER.—See Teucrium.

GERMANIC, jer-man'ik, a. Pertaining to Germany.

GERMANISM, jer-man'izm, s. An idiom of the German language.

GERMANITY, jer-man'e-te, s. Brotherhood.—Obsolete.

GERMEN.—See Germ.

GERMINAL, jer'me-nal, a. Pertaining to a germ or seed-bud.

GERMINANT, jer'me-nant, a. Sprouting.

GERMINATE, jer'me-nate, v. n. (germino, Lat.) To sprout; to bud; to shoot; to begin to vegetate;—v. a. to cause to sprout.—Unusual as an active verb.

GERMINATION, jer-me-na'shun, s. In Botany, the first act of sprouting, or first beginning of vegetation in a seed or plant; the time in which seeds vegetate.

GEROCOMIA, je-ro-ko'me-a, s. (gerian, an old man, and momein, to be concerned about, Gr.) In Medicine, that which relates to the diet and treatment of old age.

GEROCOMICAL, je-ro-ko'm'e-kal, a. Pertaining to gerocomia.

GERONTOXON, jer-on-toks'on, s. (geron, an old man, and toxon, a bow, Gr.) The opaque circle, or half circle, which occurs in the cornea of aged people.

GEROPOGON, jer-o-po'gon, s. (geron, an old man, and pogon, a beard, Gr. in allusion to the long silky beard of the seeds.) Old Man's Beard, a genus of Composite plants: Suborder, Tubulifloræ.

GERRES, ger'res, s. (geron, a thing made of wicker work, Gr.?) A genus of fishes, the body of which is oblong and fusiform: Family, Chaetodonidæ.

GERRIS, jer'ris, s. A genus of Hemipterous insects: Family, Geocorisæ.

GERUMA, je-roo'ma, s. (djerrum, Arabic name.) A genus of plants, consisting of an Arabian shrub: Order, Meliaceæ.

GERUND, jer'und, s. (gerundium, Lat.) In the Latin grammar, a kind of verbal noun, partaking of the nature of a participle.

GERUSIA, jer-u'se-a, s. (gerousia, an assembly of elders, Gr.) In ancient history, the Spartan senate. It consisted of thirty members, who were of pure Spartan blood, and not under sixty years of age.

GERVILLIA, jer-vill'e-a, s. A genus of fossil shells, having the general form of Modiola; the hinge long and straight, with small irregular transverse grooves: Family, Aviculidæ.

GESLING.—See Gosling.

GESNERIA, jes-ne're-a, s. (in honour of Conrad Gesner of Zurich, a famous naturalist.) A genus of plants: Order, Gesneriaceæ.

GESNERIACEÆ, jes-ne-ri-a'se-æ, s. (gesneria, one of the genera.) A natural order of corollifloral Exogens, consisting of herbs or shrubs, with opposite or verticillate leaves, and a cymose, rarely racemose, inflorescence; the corollas of which are very beautiful, and of various colours; the roots usually tuberous; calyx five-cleft; corolla oblique, with tube drawn out behind, and in front above, or tubular at the base; limb five-cleft and sub-labate; stamens four; anthers distinct, cohering in pairs, or altogether; ovarium one-celled; embryo straight and slender.

GESSERT.—See Jessant.

GESSE, jes, s. A name given in Switzerland to the seeds of the cultivated Lathyrus, or Cheeking Vetch, used for soiling horses. Gesse makes a light pleasant bread, but when not mixed with a due proportion of flour, it is very unwholesome as human food.

GESSES.—See JESSES.

GEST, jest, s. (gestum, Lat.) A deed, action, or achievement;

The Acts of the Apostles, which contain the peregrinations and gests of St. Paul, are a great master-key to open his epistles.—Abp. Sancroft.

show; representation; a stage in travelling; so much of a journey as is made without resting; or, properly, a rest; a stop; —(obsolete in the foregoing significations);—a roll or journal of the several days and stages prefixed in the journeys of the English kings, many of which are extant in the herald's office.

I'll give you my commission,
To let him there a month, behind the gest, Prefix'd for's parting.—Shaks.

GESTATION, jes-ta'shun, s. (gestatio, Lat.) The act of carrying young in the womb from conception to delivery; pregnancy; the act of wearing, as clothes or ornaments; the act of carrying sick persons in carriages, as a salutary exercise in the cure of disease.

GESTATORY, jes'ta-tur-e, a. That may be carried or worn.

GESTIC, jes'tik, a. Relating to deeds; legendary.

And the gay grandsire, skill'd in gestic lore,
Has frisk'd beneath the burden of threescore.—
Goldsmith.

GESTICULATE, jes-tik'u-late, v. n. (gesticulator, Lat.) To make gestures or motions, as in speaking; to use postures;—v. a. to act; to imitate.

GESTICULATION, jes-tik'u-la'shun, s. The act of making gestures to express passion or enforce sentiments; gesture; a motion of the body or limbs in speaking, or in the representation of passion or action, with a view to enforce sentiment or argument; antic tricks or motions.

GESTICULATOR, jes-tik'u-lay-tur, s. One that shows postures or makes gestures.

GESTICULATORY, jes-tik'u-lay-tur-e, a. Representing in gestures.

GESTOUR, jes'tur, s. A narrator.—Obsolete.

The proper business of a gestour was to recite tales or gests, which was only one of the branches of the minstrel's profession.—Tyrrhitt.

GESTURE, jes'ture, s. (gestus, Lat.) Action or posture of the body, expressive of sentiment or passion; any action or posture meant to express an idea or passion, or to enforce an argument or opinion; movement of the body or limbs;—v. a. to accompany with action or gesture.

GESTURELESS, jes'ture-less, a. Free from gesture.

GESTUREMENT, jes'ture-ment, s. The act of making gestures.

GET, get, v. a. (getan, gytan, or geatan, Sax.) Past, Got; anciently, Gat; past part. Got, Gotten. To procure; to obtain; to gain possession of; to have; to beget; to procreate; to generate; to learn; to prevail on; to induce; to persuade; to procure to be; to get off, to put off; to take or pull off; to remove, as to get off a ship from shoals; to sell; to dispose of; to get on, to put on; to draw or pull on; to get in, to collect and shelter; to bring under cover; to get out, to draw forth; to draw out; to disengage; to get the day, to win; to conquer; to gain the victory; to get together, to collect; to amass; to get over, to surmount; to conquer; to pass without being obstructed; to get above, to surmount; to surpass; to get up, to prepare and introduce upon the stage;

to make fit; to bring forward;—v. n. to arrive at any state or posture by degrees with some kind of labour, effort, or difficulty; to get away, or away from, to depart; to quit; to leave, or to disengage one's self from; to get among, to arrive in the midst of; to become one of a number; to get before, to arrive in front, or more forward; to get behind, to fall in the rear; to lag; to get back, to arrive at the place from which one departed; to return; to get clear, to disengage one's self; to be released as from confinement, obligation, or burden; also, to be freed from danger or embarrassment; to get down, to descend, to come from an elevation; to get home, to arrive at one's dwelling; to get in or into, to arrive within an enclosure, or a mixed body; to pass in; to insinuate one's self; to get loose or free, to disengage one's self; to be released from confinement; to get off, to escape; to depart; to get clear; also, to alight; to descend from; to get out, to depart from an enclosed place, or from confinement; to escape; to free one's self from embarrassment; to get along, to proceed; to advance; to get rid of, to free one's self from; also, to shift off; to remove; to get together, to meet; to assemble; to convene; to get up, to arise; to rise from a bed or a seat; to ascend; to climb; to get through, to pass through; to finish; to accomplish; to get quit of, to get rid of; to shift off, or to free one's self from; to get forward, to proceed; to prosper; to make progress; to advance in wealth; to get near, to approach within a small distance; to get ahead, to advance; to prosper; to get on, to proceed; to advance; to get a mile or other distance, to pass over it in travelling; to get at, to reach; to make way to; to get asleep, to fall asleep; to get drunk, to become intoxicated; to get between, to arrive between; to get to, to reach; to arrive.

GETHYLLIS, je-thill'lis, s. (getheo, I rejoice, Gr.)

A genus of plants, the flowers of which have a delicious perfume, natives of the Cape of Good Hope: Order, Amaryllidaceae.

GETONIA, je-to-ne-a, s. (meaning not given.) A genus of plants, consisting of climbing shrubs, natives of Malabar and the East Indies: Order, Combretaceae.

GETTER, get'tur, s. One who gets, gains, obtains, or acquires; one who begets or procreates.

GETTING, get'ting, s. The act of obtaining, gaining, or acquiring; acquisition; gain; profit.

GEUM, ge'um, s. (geo, I give a relish, Gr. from the quality of the roots of G. urbanum.) A genus of herbs: Order, Rosaceae.

GEWGAW, gu'gaw, s. (joujou, a plaything; a toy, Fr. gegaf, Sax.) A showy trifle; a toy; a bauble; a splendid plaything;—a. trifling; showy without value.

GEYSER, ge'sur, s. (from an Icelandic word, signifying raging or roaring.) The name of certain spouting fountains of boiling water, situated about thirty miles from the volcano Hecla, in Iceland. These fountains are remarkable for the height to which the water and the stones which issue from them are frequently projected. The jet of the great Geyser is said to have been observed to rise 550 feet; but it is seldom seen above from 90 to 100—sometimes, as by Mr. Henderson, in 1815, to 150 feet. One of the small Geysers was observed by the same traveller to project a stone to the height of 200 feet.

UL—GHOSTLINESS.

GHOSTLY—GIBBERISH.

he discomfited an host.—
Mir. for Mag.

t'fal-le, ad. Frightfully.

st'le-nes, s. Horror of countenance of a ghost; paleness.

a. (gastlic, Sax.) Like a ghost deathlike; pale; dismal; horridreadful.

nes, s. Horror of look; ghastrliook you pale, mistress!

ve the ghastness of the eye!—

GIRONDIST, zhe-rond'ist, } party called the Gironde.

GIRROCK, gir'rak, s. A kind of fish.

GIRT, gert, v. a. (past and past part. of Gird.) To gird; to surround.

GIRT, gert, } s. The leathern girdle buckled GIRTH, gerth, } under a horse's belly. In Letterpress Printing, a leather thong belonging to the carriage of a press, by which it is let in and out. In Measurement, the circumference of a body. In measuring a tree, the term is used by some for the fourth part of the circumference, on account of the use made of it. The square of the fourth part is considered, in this case, as equal to the area of the section of the tree; which square, therefore, multiplied by the length of the tree, gives the solid content. Girt-line, a rope to lift up the rigging to the masthead on first rigging the ship;—v. a. to bind with a girt or girth.

GISE, jize, v. a. To feed or pasture.

GISEKIA, ge-se'ke-a, s. (in honour of P. D. Giseke, a Dutch botanist.) A genus of plants: Order, Portulacæ.

GISLE, giz'zl, s. A pledge.—Obsolete.

GISMONDINE, jis'mon-din, s. (in honour of the mineralogist Gismondi, by whom it was termed Zengonite.) A mineral occurring, at Capo de Bove, near Rome, in white translucent crystals, having an adamantine lustre. It consists of silica, 41.4; alumina, 2.5; lime, 48.6; magnesia, 1.5; oxide of iron, 2.5; oxide of manganese, 0.50; sp. gr. 2.16—2.2. H = 7.0—7.5.

GIST, jist, s. (gesir, gile, Fr.) In Law, the main point of a question; the point on which an action rests.

GITHAGO, gith-a'go, s. (from gith, or git, a black aromatic seed, which was employed in cooking by the Romans.) Corncockle, a genus of plants, consisting of upright annual plants with red or white flowers. G. segatum is a common weed, and very troublesome in cornfields: Order, Caryophyllaceae.

GITTERN.—See GUITAR.

GITTITH, git'tith, s. A word used in the Psalms of David to signify the winepress.

GIVE, giv, v. a. (gifan, gyfan, Sax.) Past, Gave; past part. Given. To bestow; to confer without any price or reward; to transmit from himself to another by hand, speech, or writing; to deliver; to put into one's possession; to consign; to impart; to communicate; to pay as a price or reward, or in exchange; to yield; not to withhold; to quit; to yield as due; to confer; to expose; to yield to the power of; to grant; to allow; to permit; to afford; to supply; to empower; to commission; to enable; to pay; to utter; to vent; to pronounce; to exhibit; to show, as the product of a calculation; to do any act, the consequences of which affect others; to send forth, as odours from any body; to addict; to apply; to resign; to yield up; to conclude; to suppose; to present for taking or acceptance; to pledge; to give away, to alienate the title or property of a thing; to make over to another; to transfer; to give back, to return; to restore; to give forth, to publish; to tell; to report publicly; to give the hand, to yield pre-eminence, as being subordinate or inferior; to give in, to allow by way of abatement or deduction from a claim; to yield what may be justly demanded; to give over, to leave; to quit; to cease; to abandon; to addict; to attach to; to despair of recovery; to believe to be lost, or past recovery; to give out, to utter publicly; to report; to proclaim; to publish; to issue; to send forth; to show; to exhibit in false appearance; to send out; to emit; to give up, to resign; to quit; to yield as hopeless; to surrender; to relinquish; to cede; to abandon; to deliver; to give one's self up, to despair of one's recovery; to conclude to be lost; to resign or devote; to addict; to abandon; to give way, to yield; to withdraw to make room for; to fail; to yield to force; to break or fall; to recede; to make room for. In Nautical Language, to give way is an order to a boat's crew to row, after having ceased for a short time, or to increase their exertions; to give way together, an order to keep time together in rowing, so that the propelling force may be uniform and equal; to give chase, to pursue a ship or fleet;—v. n. to yield to pressure; to begin to melt; to thaw; to grow soft, so as to yield to pressure; to move; to recede; to give in, to go back; to give way;—(the latter phrase is not used;)

In the meantime, what doth St. Paul! doth he give in?—By. Hall.

GIVES.—See GYVES.

GIVING, giv'ing, s. The act of conferring; the act of alleging what is not real.

His givings out were of an infinite distance
From his true meant design.—Shaks.

Giving rings, a custom observed by members of Serjeants' Inn when called to the degree of the coif. Each serjeant gives in a ring containing his own motto.—2 Q. B. 244.

GIZZARD, giz'zard, s. (gésier, Fr.) The muscular or pyloric division of the stomach of birds. To fret the gizzard, to harass; to vex one's self.

But that which does them greatest harm,
Their spiritual gizzards are to warn.—

GLABELLA, glab'ella, s. (glabellus, smooth, Lat.) A genus of Mollusca, the shell of which is volutiform; the spire more or less conic, and well developed; pillar with basal plaits; the inner lip obsolete; outer lip thick, toothed, or crenate, rarely smooth: Family, Volutidae. Also, the space betwixt the eyebrows.

GLABRIATE, glab're-ate, v. a. (glabro, Lat.) To make plain or smooth.—Obsolete.

GLABRITY, glab're-ty, s. Smoothness.—Obsolete.

GLABROUS, glab'rus, a. (glaber, Lat.) Smooth, like baldness. In Botany, without pubescence.

GLACIAL, glash'e-al, a. Icy; consisting of ice; frozen. Glacial phosphoric acid,—see Metaphosphoric Acid. The term glacial is also applied to other acids, the crystals of which have a glasslike appearance.

GLACIATE, glash'e-ate, v. n. To turn to ice.

GLACIATION, glash'e-a'shun, s. The act of freezing; ice formed.

GLACIER, glas'e-ur, s. (glacio, I congeal, Lat.)

A name given to an immense accumulation of ice and snow on a mountain. The Alpine glaciers occupy a superficial extent of 1484 square miles. From Mont Blanc to the borders of the Tyrol there are reckoned 400, of which the greater number varies from 10 to 15 miles long, and from 1 to 2½ broad; their vertical thickness ranges from 100 to 600 feet.

GLACIOUS, glash'us, a. Icy; resembling ice.

GLACIS, glash'is, s. (French.) In Building, or Gardening, an easy, insensible slope. In Fortification, an elevation of earth surrounding a fortress on the exterior of the covered wing, to which it serves as a parapet.

GLAD, glad, a. (glæd, or glād, Sax.) Cheerful; gay; in a state of hilarity; wearing a gay appearance; bright; showy; pleasing; exhilarating; expressing gladness; pleased; affected with pleasure or moderate joy;—v. a. to make glad; to cheer; to exhilarate;—(the past and past part. gladdened is obsolete;)—v. n. to be glad; to rejoice.—Obsolete as a neuter verb.

Gladd'et thou in such scorn!
I call my wish back.—Massinger.

L, glad'fūl, a. Full of gladness.—Obso-le leave we them in pleasure and repast, dining their joyous days and gladful nights.—Spenser.

NESS, glad'fūl-nes, s. Joy; gladness.—te.

RE, glad'e-ate, a. (gladius, a sword, Lat.) -shaped.

FOR, glad'e-ay-tur, s. (from gladius, Lat.) -player; a prize-fighter. In Roman Antiquity, the gladiators had their origin in the barbaric custom of sacrificing captives and slaves at the altars and tombs of persons of distinction.

In the arena the captive or slave fought for liberty, and the condemned malefactor for life. As the sport increased in popularity, persons of rank took share in the combats for pay, till knights and others of rank were found in conflict, cutting and slaying each other, to the immense audiences of all ranks who attended the exhibitions.

FORIAL, glad'e-a-to're-al, } a. Relating to FORY, glad'e-a-tur-e, } gladiators.

amphitheatrical gladiatures, the lives of captives at the mercy of the vulgar.—Gayton.

LE.—See Gladiolus.

LUS, gla-de-o-lus, s. (gladius, a sword, Lat.) sword-shaped leaves.) The Corn-flag, a genus of plants, some of the species of which are remarkable for the beauty of their flowers: Order, æ.

PHIA, gla-dit'she-a, s. (in honour of Professed Aditch of Berlin.) A genus of Leguminous plants, consisting of trees, with greenish flowers and in spikes: Suborder, Cæsalpinieæ.

S, gla-de-us, s. (jus gladii, the right of the sword.) In Law, a supreme jurisdiction; hence it is supposed, that at the creation of the world he was gladio succinctus, to signify that he had a jurisdiction over the county.—Camd.

Seld. Tit. of Hon. In Zoology, the name of the internal horny place of certain Cædods, known by the name of Pen-fishes.

, glad'le, ad. With pleasure; joyfully.

SS, glad'nes, s. Joy, or a moderate degree of pleasure of mind; cheerfulness.

IP, glad'ship, s. State of gladness.—Oband such a sorowe hath to him take, that glad'shippe he hath all forsake.—Gower.

ME, glad'sum, a. Pleased; gay; delighted; joyful; pleasing.

MELY, glad'sum-le, ad. With joy and merrily.

MENESS, glad'sum-nes, s. Joy or moderate pleasure of mind; showiness.

IRN, glad'win, s. The Iris foetidisima, or beef plant.

GLAIRE, s. (glaire, Fr.) The white of an egg; viscous, transparent substance, resembling the white of an egg; a kind of halberd;—v. a. to varnish with the white of an egg; to varnish.

GLAIRY—GLANDIFORM.

GLAIRY, gla're, a. Like glair, or partaking of its qualities.

GLAMOUR, glam'ur, s. An old term of popular superstition in Scotland, denoting a kind of magical mist believed to be raised by sorcerers, and which deluded the spectators with visions of things which had no real existence.

GLANCE, glans, s. (glanz, Germ.) A sudden shoot of light or splendour; a shoot or darting of sight; a rapid or momentary view or cast; a snatch of sight. A name given to certain minerals which have a metallic or pseudo-metallic lustre; as glance coal, a name given to anthracite, from its peculiar lustre; glance silver, the sulphuret of silver; glance copper, the sulphuret of copper;—v. a. to shoot a sudden ray of splendour; to fly off in an oblique direction; to dart aside; to view with a sudden or quick cast of the eye; to snatch a momentary or hasty view; to hint; to censure by oblique hints;—v. a. to shoot or dart suddenly or obliquely; to cast for a moment.

GLANCINGLY, glans'ing-le, ad. By glancing; in a glancing manner; transiently.

GLAND, gland, s. (glandula, dim. of glans, glandis, an acorn, Lat.) In Anatomy, a small body, composed of various tissues, blood-vessels, nerves, &c. Some of the glands, according to Raspail, partake of the nature of stomachs, the office of which is to elaborate in their cells a substance tending to organize; others form a kind of branchiae, destined to purify the fluids tending to organize. Glands may be divided into three classes:—1. The absorbent glands, forming a part of the absorbent system. They are of various sizes, are of a roundish form, and consist of a congeries of ramified absorbent vessels, frequently connected together. 2. The serenent glands, which are of various form and size. Their office is to separate the various secretory and excretory fluids of the blood. 3. Vascular glands, masses consisting of a congeries of arteries and veins, but without any opening internally. Their office is unknown. Glands of Pacchioni, the granulations found in the superior longitudinal sinuses of the membranes of the brain, named after their discoverer, Pacchioni. Vesicular glands, a name applied by Guettard to the polleniferous organs on the inferior side of the leaves of the hop. Glans penis, the vascular body forming the apex of the penis. The corona glandis is the prominent ridge which surrounds the glans penis. In Botany, any superficial callosity, whether of a secreting nature or not. Lenticular glands, brown oval spots found on the bark of many plants, especially willows, indicating the points from which roots will appear, if the branch be placed in circumstances favourable for their production.

GLANDAGE, glans'dage, s. Mastage; feeding on acorns.

GLANDERED, glans'durd, a. Affected with glanders.

GLANDERS, glans'durz, s. In Farriery, a disease of the mucous membrane of the nostrils of a horse, attended in its progress with an increased and vitiated secretion.

GLANDIFEROUS, glans-dif'e-rus, a. (glans, and fero, I bear, Lat.) Acorn-bearing.

GLANDIFORM, glans-de-fawrin, a. (glans, and formis, form, Lat.) Having the figure of an acorn or gland.

GLANDULAR—GLASS.

GLANDULAR, glán'du-lár, } a. Having glands; GLANDULOUS, glán'du-lus, } consisting of glands; pertaining to glands.

GLANDULARLY, glán'du-lár-le, ad. In a glandular manner.

GLANDULATION, glán-du-la'shun, s. In Botany, the situation and structure of the secretory vessels in plants.

GLANDULE, glán'dule, s. (glandula, Lat.) A small gland or secreting vessel.

GLANDULIFEROUS, glán-du-lif'e-rus, a. (glandula, a little acorn, and féro, I bear, Lat.) Bearing glands.

GLANDULINA, glán-du-lí'na, s. A name given by D'Orbigny to a subgenus of Foraminifera, allied to Nodosaria.

GLANDULOSITY, glán-du-los'e-te, s. A collection of glands.—Seldom used.

GLANS, glans, s. (Latin.) In Anatomy, that part of the penis which is covered by the prepuce; also, the lip or extremity of the clitoris.

GLAPHYRIA, gla-fir'e-a, s. (glaphyros, elegant, in reference to the neatness and elegance of the shrubs.) A genus of small Indian trees: Order, Myrtaceæ.

GLAPHYRIDÆ, gla-fir'e-de, s. The Wasp-beetles, a family of Coleopterous insects, distinguished by the unusual shortness of their elytra, and their soft semi-membranous texture. They are extremely hairy.

GLARE, glare, s. (glar, Dan.) A bright, dazzling light; clear, brilliant lustre or splendour, that dazzles the eyes; a fierce, piercing look; a viscous, transparent substance,—see Glair;—v. n. to shine with a clear, bright, dazzling light; to look with fierce, piercing eyes; to shine with excessive lustre; to be ostentatiously splendid;—v. a. to shoot a dazzling light.

GLAREOLA, gla-re-o'la, s. The Pratincole, a genus of birds: Family, Charadriadæ.

GLAREOUS, gla're-us, a. (glairoux, Fr.) Resembling the white of an egg; consisting of white, viscous, transparent matter.

GLARING, gla'ring, a. Applied to anything notorious, as a glaring crime.

GLARINGLY, gla'ring-le, ad. Openly; clearly; notoriously.

GLASS, glas, s. (glass, Sax. glas, Swed. Germ. Dan. and Dut.) A transparent and impermiable substance, exceedingly brittle while cold, but which, by the application of a high degree of heat, becomes so flexible and tenacious that it may be moulded with the utmost facility into any form, or spun into filaments of inconceivable fineness, which, when cold, are highly elastic. The various kinds of glass are—Flint-glass, or crystal; Crown-glass, or German sheet-glass; Broad, or common window-glass; Bottle, or common green-glass; and Plate-glass;—a mirror; a glass vessel of any kind; a vessel filled with sand for measuring time; the destined time of man's life, as his glass has run; the quantity of liquor that a glass vessel contains; a vessel that shows the weight of the air; a perspective glass. Glasses, in the plural, spectacles. Glass-blower, one whose business is to blow and fashion glass after it has undergone the necessary fusion from heat. Glass-cutting, the process by which glass may be cut or ground into ornamental forms. Glass-furnace, a furnace used in melting the materials of which glass is composed. Glass-gazing, addicted to viewing one's self in a mirror; finical.

Glass-grinder, one whose occupation is to grind and polish glass. Glass-house, a manufactory in which siliceous or flint dust and fixed alkalis are subjected in furnaces to such an amount of heat as render them fluid, which, when cold, constitute glass. Glass-man, one who sells glass. Glass-metal, glass in fusion. Glass of antimony, a brown glasslike substance, consisting of the protoxide and sulphuret of antimony. Glass-pot, the crucible in which the materials of glass are melted and kept in the furnace. Glass-painting, the method of staining glass in such a manner as to produce the effect of representing all the objects whereof the art is susceptible. Glass-soap, a name given by glass-blowers to the black oxide of manganese. Glass-work, manufacture of glass. Glass-works, the place or buildings where glass is made;—a. made of glass; vitreous, as a glass bottle;—v. a. to cover with glass; to glaze; to see as in a glass;—(obsolete in the last sense.)

Metaphorically I am partaker of thy passion.

And in thy case do glass mine own debility.—Shaks.

to case in glass.—Obsolete. Among seamen, the common name for a telescope. Half-hour glass, frequently termed the watch-glass, on account of its being often used to measure the time which each watch has to remain on deck. Half-minute and quarter-minute glasses are used to ascertain the rate of a ship's velocity, measured by the log. Night-glass, a telescope used for viewing objects at night. Sand-glass is used in the plural to denote the duration of any action, as 'we were engaged yard-arm and yard-arm three glasses,' or during the time the sand was emptying itself from one vessel to the other three times.

GLASSFUL, glas'fúl, s. As much as a glass holds.

GLASSINESS, glas'se-nes, s. The quality of being glassy or smooth; a vitreous appearance.

GLASSLIKE, glas'like, a. Clear; resembling glass.

By example most we sinned before.

And glasslike clearness mix'd with frailty bore.—Dryden.

GLASSWORT.—See Salsola.

GLASSY, glas'se, a. Made of glass; vitreous; resembling glass in its properties, as in smoothness, brittleness, or transparency.

GLASWEGIAN, glas-we'je-an, s. A native of the city of Glasgow.

GLAUBERITE, glaw'bur-ite, s. A mineral which occurs massive, and also crystallized in rock. The primary form of the crystal, an oblique rhombic prism. It consists of sulphate of soda, sulphate of lime, 49: sp. gr. 2.807; H = 2.3.—See Glauber Salt.

GLAUBER SALT, glaw'bur sawlt, s. (after Rudolf Glauber, a distinguished German chemist of the 16th century.) A substance which, as a mineral body in a state of efflorescence, also crystallized, the primary form of the crystal being an oblique prism. A specimen from Epsom, according to Beudant, consisted of 44.8: soda, 33.1; water, 20.2. The mineral is found in the salt mines of Germany, and France: sp. gr. 1.47.

GLAUDESCENT, glaw-ses'sent, a. Having the colour of a bluish-green, hoary, or sea-green.

GLAUCIUM, glaw'se-um, s. (glaukos, sea-green, in allusion to the colour of the plant.) The Horn-poppy, a genus of plants, consisting of evergreen, glaucous, biennial or annual herbs, abounding in an acrid juice, said to be poisonous, and to create madness: Order, Papaveraceæ.

GLAUCOLITE, glaw'ko-lite, s. (glaukos, blue, and lithos, a stone, Gr.) A mineral which occurs massive, with a crystalline structure and cleavage, parallel to the planes of a rhombic prism, indistinct, of a lavender-blue or green colour. It consists of silica, 50.58; alumina, 27.60; lime, 10.27; potash, 1.27; soda, 2.96; magnesia, 2.96: sp. gr. 2.7—3.2. H=5—6. Found near the Lake Baikal, in Siberia.

GLAUCOMA, glaw-ko'ma, s. (glaukoma, Gr.) In Pathology, anciently, the same as cataract, but now used to denote a peculiar opacity of the vitreous humour, with morbid alteration of the retina, characterized by loss of vision, and the appearance of a bluish or greenish speck.

GLAUCOPICRINE, glaw-kop'e-krin, s. A substance obtained in white scales from the plant Gladium luteum.

GLAUCOPINÆ, glaw-kop'e-ne, s. (glaucoptis, one of the genera.) The Wattle-crows, a subfamily of the Corvidæ, or Crow family, in which the bill is short; the culmen elevated and curved from the base; the upper mandible entire; the gonys straight; the commissure considerably curved; the rictus smooth; wings short and rounded.

GLAUCOPTIS, glaw-ko'pis, s. (glaukos, blue, and ops, an eye, Gr.) The Wattle-crow, a genus of birds, remarkable for the fleshy wattles attached to the base of the beak: Type of the subfamily Glaucoptinæ.

GLAUCOSIS, glaw-ko'sis, s. Same as Glaucoma.

GLAUCOUS, glaw'kus, a. In Botany, applied to leaves which have a decided hoary-grey surface.

GLAUCUS, glaw'kus, s. (glaukos, sea-green, Gr.) A genus of Nudibranchiate Mollusca, constituting the type of a family, the Glaucidae. The animals of this family are marine, gelatinous, elongated, slightly flattened, and terminated backwards in a point; the branchiæ disposed in pairs on the sides: the colouring is very brilliant. In Grecian Mythology, a marine deity, the son of Neptune and one of the Naiads, or, according to others, of Polybius and Alcyone. He had the gift of prophecy.

GLAUX, glawks, s. (glaukion, the name of a maritime plant described by Dioscorides.) Black Saltwort, a genus of Maritime plants, with glaucous leaves: Order, Salicaceæ.

GLAIVE, glawe, s. (glaive, Fr.) A broad sword; a falchion.—Obsolete.

Achilles pressing through the Phrygian gloves.—Spenser.

GLAVER, glaw'ur, v. n. (glavru, I flatter, Welsh.) To flatter; to wheedle.—Obsolete.

Some slavish, glavering, flattering parasite, or hanger-on.—South.

GLAVERER, glaw'ur-ur, s. A flatterer.—Not used.

GLAYMORE.—See Claymore.

GLAZE, glaze, v. a. (from glass.) To furnish with windows of glass; to fill a window-frame with glass; to incrust with a vitreous substance; to cover with anything smooth and shining, or to render the exterior of a thing smooth, bright, and showy; to give a glassy surface; to make glossy.

GLAZEN, gla'zn, a. Resembling glass.—Obsolete.

Old glazen eyes,

He hath not reach'd his despair yet.—Ben Jonson.

GLAZIER, gla'zhur, s. One whose business is to set window glass, or to fix panes of glass to the sashes of windows, &c.

GLAZING, gla'zing, s. The process of placing the panes of glass between the frames of windows, doors, &c.; the art of communicating a glasslike appearance to pottery and chinaware, by means of a substance termed a glaze; the burnishing of a metallic, wooden, or stone surface with a polishing powder; the overlaying or finishing of pictures in oil with brilliant and pellucid colours.

GLEAM, gleme, s. (gleam, or glam, Sax.) A sudden shoot of light; a beam; a ray; a small stream of light; lustre; brightness;—v. n. to shoot or dart as rays of light; to shine; to flash; to spread a flood of light. In Hawking, a hawk is said to gleam when she casts or throws off the filth from the gorge.

GLEAMING, gle'ming, s. A sudden shoot of light.

GLEAMY, gle'me, a. Flashing; casting light in rays.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warrior bends his way.—Pope.

GLEAN, glene, v. a. (glaner, Fr.) To gather the stalks and ears of grain which reapers leave behind them; to collect things thinly scattered; to gather what is left in small parcels or numbers;—v. n. to gather stalks or ears of grain left by reapers;—s. a collection made by gleaning, or by gathering here and there a little.

GLEANER, gle'nur, s. One who gathers after reapers; one who collects detached parts or numbers, or who gathers slowly with labour.

GLEANING, gle'ning, s. The act of gathering after reapers; that which is collected after gleaning.

GLEBE, glebe, s. (gleba, Lat.) Turf; soil; ground. Among Miners, a piece of earth in which some mineral ore is contained. In Law, the land belonging to a parish church besides the tithes.

GLEBOUS, gle'bus, } a. Turfy; cloddy.

GLEBY, gle'be, }

GLECHOMA, gle-ko'ma, s. (glechom, a sort of thyme among the Greeks.) Ground-ivy, or Gill, a genus of small trailing herbs: Order, Lamiaceæ.

GLECHON, gle'kon, s. (glechom, the Greek name of the plant Penny-royal, which this genus resembles.) A genus of plants: Order, Lamiaceæ.

GLEDE, glede, s. (glida, Sax.) A rapacious fowl; the kite, a species of falcon.

GLEE, glee, s. (glie, Sax.) Joy; merriment; gaiety; a kind of catch or song sung in parts;—v. n. (gluyeren, Teut.) to squint.

GLEED, gleed, s. (gled, Sax.) A glowing coal.—This is a very old word, but now obsolete.

Piping hot out of the glede.—Chaucer.

GLEEFUL, gle'ful, a. Merry; gay; joyous.

GLEEK, gleek, s. Music, or a musician;

No money on my faith, but the gleek; I will give you the minstrel.—Shaks.

a game at cards; a scoff; a joke;

Here, Juno, here. But stay, I do espy

A pretty gleek coming from Pallas' eye.—

GNOSTIC, nos'tik, s. (gnosticus, knowing, Lat.) The Gnostics were a sect of philosophers who seem to have appeared in the first century. They believed that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, but inferior to the Father—that He came into the world for the rescue and happiness of man. They rejected the humanity of Christ, upon the principle that everything corporeal is essentially and intrinsically evil. The persuasion that evil resided in matter as its centre and source made them treat the body with contempt, discourage marriage, and deny the resurrection of the dead, and its reunion with the spirit. They divided all nature into three kinds of beings—the hylic or material, the psychic or animal, and the pneumatic or spiritual. Mankind by them was likewise classed into three divisions. The material, those who were incapable of knowledge, and perished soul and body; the spiritual, among whom the Gnostics classed themselves, were certain of salvation; the animal, those who were either capable of being saved or damned;—a. pertaining to the Gnostics.

GNOSTICISM, nos'te-sizm, s. The doctrines or system of philosophy taught by the Gnostics.

- GORGONS, gawr'guns, s. In Mythology and Antiquity, a name given by the poets to the three sisters, Stheno, Euryale, and Medusa, daughters of Phorcis and Ceto. Medusa was mortal; but the other two sisters were regarded as subject to neither age nor death. The Gorgons are represented with wings, and as having serpents writhing round their heads; their hands were of brass; their bodies were covered with impenetrable scales; their teeth were of an enormous size, and they could turn to stone all those on whom they looked. The Gorgons resided in the inland parts of Lybia, near the Lake of Triton, or the gardens of the Hesperides. Persens rendered his name immortal by the conquest of Medusa. He cut off her head, and the blood that dropped from the wound produced the innumerable serpents that infest Africa; the horse Pegasus also arose from the blood of Medusa, as did Chrysaor, with his golden sword. According to Virgil, on the death of Medusa, Stheno and Euryale were appointed to keep the palace of Pluto. They are variously represented by other authors as female warriors, or as monstrous women, covered with hair, who lived in woods and forests. Others, again, make them animals, resembling wild sheep, the eyes of which had a poisonous and fatal influence.

GRANULATE, gran'u-late, v. a. To form into grains or small masses; to raise into small asperities; to make rough on the surface;—v. n. to collect or be formed into grains.

GRANULATED, gran'u-lay-ted, a. Consisting of grains; resembling grains.

GRANULATION, gran-u-lashun, s. The act of forming into grains. In Chemistry, an operation by which metallic substances are reduced into small grains for the purpose of facilitating their combination with other substances. In Pathology, firm, rounded, or ovoid, glistening, semitransparent tumours, resembling in figure and volume a millet-seed or pea.

GRANULE, gran'ule, s. A little; a small particle.

GRANULIFEROUS, gran-u-lif'er-us, a. Full of granulations, as in the shell Mitra granulifera.

GRANULIFORM, gran-u-le-fawrm, a. (granum, a grain, and formis, form, Lat.) In Mineralogy, having an irregular granular structure, as Pyroxene granuliforme.

GRANULOUS, gran'u-lus, a. Full of grains; abounding with granular substances.

GRAPE, grape, s. The fruit of Vitis vinifera. The other plants of the same genus which bear fruit resembling the grape are chiefly American, but are almost of no value,—see Vitis: the fruit from which wine is made. In the Manege, grapes signify many tumours on the leg of a horse. Grapeshot, an assemblage, in the form of a cylindrical column, of nine balls resting on a circular plate, through which a pin passes as an axis. The balls are contained in a canvas bag, and are bound together on the outside of the latter by a cord, disposed about the column in the manner of a net. The size of shot is according to the bore of the piece of ordnance from which it is to be fired. Grapewort, the poisonous plant Actæa, called also Herb christopher, or baneberries.

GRAPELESS, grape'les, a. Wanting the strength and flavour of the grape.

GRAPESTONE, grape'stone, a. The stone or seed of the grape.

GRAPHIC, graf'ik, } a. (from grapho, I write, } GRAPHICAL, graf'e-kal, } Gr.) Relating to the } art of writing or delineating; well delineated; } describing with accuracy. Graphic microscope, } an instrument invented by Cornelius Varley, for } the purpose of depicting, on the principle of re- } flection, the objects represented by the microscope. } Graphic tellurium, or graphite gold, a mineral of } a steel-grey colour, approaching to tin-white, and } is generally splendid, but sometimes slightly } tarnished externally; primary crystal, a rhombic } prism. Its constituents are, tellurium, 60; gold, } 30; silver, 10; sometimes a trace of lead. Gra- } phic granite, a variety of granite, composed of } felspar and quartz, so arranged as to produce an } imperfect laminar structure. When a section of } graphic granite is made at right angles to the } alterations of the constituent minerals, broken } lines, resembling Hebrew characters, present } themselves; hence its derivation.

GRAPHICALLY, graf'e-kal-le, ad. With good delineation; in a picturesque manner.

GRAPHIPTERUS, gra-fip'ter-us, s. (grapho, I write, and pteryx, a wing, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Carabidae.

GRAPHIS, graf'is, s. (grapho, I write, from the apotheca being like the characters of some strange language.) A genus of Lichens: Tribe, Idiothalamena.

GRAPHITE, gra'fite, s. Another name for black-lead, or plumbago; carburet of iron. Graphite is of a dark steel-grey, or nearly iron-black. It leaves on paper a well-defined shining trace, which has very nearly the colour of the mass, and consists of minute grains. It is perfectly opaque, easily scraped by a knife, and soils the fingers. It is a conductor of electricity, and when rubbed on sealing-wax till a metallic trace appears, communicates no electricity to the wax. Specific gravity from 1.98 to 2.26. Constituent parts—carbon, 92.0; iron, 8.0.—Cleveland.

GRAPHOMETER, graf-om'e-tur, s. (grapho, I write, and metron, a measure, Gr.) A mathematical instrument used in land-surveying; otherwise termed a semicircle. Its use is to observe any angle, the vertex of which is at the centre of the instrument in any plane, and to find how many degrees it contains.

GRAPHOMETRICAL, graf-o-met're-kal, a. Relating to, or ascertained by a graphometer.

GRAPNEL, grap'nel, } s. (from grapple.) A sort of } GRAPPLING, grap'ling, } small anchor, fitted with } four or five flukes, or claws, and generally used to } ride a boat or other small vessel. Fire-grappling, } an instrument resembling the former, but differing } in the construction of its flukes, which are fur- } nished with strong barbs at their sides. They are } usually attached to the yard-arms of a ship, in } order to grapple a vessel of the enemy which it is } intended to board: termed also grappling-irons.

GRAPPLE, grap'pl, v. a. (greipen, Goth.) To

And leave your England as dead midnight still.—Shaks.

to grapple with, to contend with; to struggle with successfully;—s. a seizing; close hug in contest; the wrestler's hold; close fight; a hook or iron instrument by which one ship fastens on another.

GRAPPLEMENT, grap'pl-ment, s. A grappling; close fight or embrace.

GRAPSUS, grap'sus, s. (meaning unknown to us.) A genus of Decapod Crustaceans of the crab kind: Family, Brachyura.

GRAPTOLEPIS, grap-tol'e-pis, s. (graptos, painted, and lepis, a scale, Gr.) A genus of fossil ganoid fishes, discovered in the Coal formation of Lancashire by Dr. Rankin of Carlisle.

GRAPTOLITE, grap'to-lite, } s. (graptolite,

GRAPTOLITHUS, grap-tol'e-thus, } painted, and } lithos, a stone, Gr.) A name given by Linnaeus } to denote such stones as resemble drawings, as in } the Florentine ruin marble, dendritic limestone, } moss agates, &c.

GRAPY, gra'pe, a. Like grapes; full of clusters of grapes; made of grapes.

GRASP, grasp, v. a. (graspere, Ital.) To seize and hold by clasping or embracing with the finger or arms; to catch; to lay hold of; to take possession of; to seize;—v. n. to catch or seize; to gripe; to struggle; to strive;—(obsolete in the last two senses;)

His hands abroad display'd, as one that grips

to encroach; to grasp at, to catch at; to try to seize;—s. the gripe or seizure of the hand; possession; hold; reach of the arms; figuratively, the power of seizing.

GRASPABLE, grasp'a-bl, a. That can be grasped.

GRASPER, grasp'ur, s. One who grasps or seizes; one who catches at; one who holds.

GRASS, gras, s. (gras, Sax. gras, Goth. Germ. and Dut.) The common herbage of the field on which cattle feed. In Botany, a plant pertaining to the order Gramineæ,—which see. Grass land, in Agriculture, kept continually in grass, as pasture or meadow, in contradistinction to ground alternately in tillage and grass. Grass-land, in Law, the grazing or turning up of the earth with a plough; an ancient customary service of tenants doing one day's work for their landlord. Grass-week.—See Rogation-week. Grass of Parnassus, the marsh plant Parnassia palustris, a native of both this country and of Greece. Grass-poly, the small hedge hyssop Lithum hypophyllum, a native annual plant;—grass-blade, a stalk of grass; grass-green, green with grass; dark-green like the colour of grass; grass-green, overgrown with grass; grass-plot, a level spot covered with grass.

GRASS, gras, v. a. To cover with grass, or with turf;—v. n. to produce grass; to be covered with grass.

or erected near it as a monument. In Grammar, a species of accent expressed thus (´), and showing that the voice is to be depressed, and the syllable over which it is marked pronounced in a low deep tone. In many works where the pronunciation is marked, the grave accent placed over a vowel denotes that the vowel has its long name sound, as in gra'ver. The acute accent (´) marks the short sound, as gra'vel. In Music, same as adagio, slow, in Italian music; in general, the term denotes a low or deep sound—the thicker the cord or string is, the graver the note will be. Gravedigging or burying beetle,—see Nicrophagus;—v. a. to cover with gravel; to stick in the sand; to puzzle; to stop; to embarrass; to hurt the foot of a horse, by gravel lodged under the shoe.

GRAVEL, grav'el, s. Small stones generally deposited on the beds of rivers or the sea-shore, from the consolidation of which, in former periods, the conglomerates of the various formations have been formed. Unconsolidated gravel and sand beds often alternate with each other, or occur separately at elevations from tide-mark to the height of many hundred feet. Recent gravel beds are formed in many localities from the wearing down of the old conglomerates. Organic remains seldom occur in formations of this kind, whether ancient or modern, except indeed such as have been recently washed on shore. In Pathology, the collection of calculi in the urinary bladder.

GRAVELESS, graveless, a. Without a grave; unburied.

GRAVELLY, grav'el-le, a. Abounding with gravel; consisting of gravel.

GRAVIMETER, gra-vim'e-tur, s. (gravitas, gravity, and metor, I measure, Lat.) An instrument for ascertaining the specific gravity of bodies.

GRAVING, gra'ving, s. Carved work; impression.

Graving dock, a small dock capable of holding one, or at most two vessels. It is used for holding state and other ornamental barges, for the purpose of defending them from the weather. It is also applied to docks in which the hulks of ships are retained previous to being launched.

GRAVITATE, grav'e-tate, v. n. (graviter, Fr.) To tend to the centre of a body, or the central point of attraction.

GRAVITATION, grav'e-ta'shun, s. The act of tending to the centre; the force by which bodies are pressed or drawn, or by which they tend towards the centre of the earth or other centre, or the effect of that force.

GRAVITY, grav'e-te, s. (gravite, Fr.) Heaviness; weight; that mutual tendency which all bodies have to approach each other with forces which are directly to their masses, and inversely proportional to the square of their distances. The force by which bodies are propelled towards the centre of the earth results from this law, and its manifest effect on the body so propelled is termed weight. Specific gravity, the ratio of the weight of a body to the weight of some other body assumed as a standard. The standard adopted in Britain is that of pure distilled water at a temperature of 62°. The French take it at the freezing-point, 32°. A body when immersed in fluid loses just as much of its weight as is equal to the weight of a given volume of the fluid. If the weight lost in water be made the divisor of the weight in air, the quotient gives the specific gravity. The instrument used is called the hydrostatic balance. The specific gravities of gaseous bodies are generally determined in terms of that of atmospheric air; the difference between the weights of a flask when exhausted of air by means of an air-pump and when filled with gas, given the weight of the gas which it contains. One cubic foot of rain water weighs exactly 1000 ounces avoirdupois, hence the relative weight of other bodies is easily referred to this standard; and hence gold, when hammered, weighs 19.362. It is therefore  $19\frac{362}{1000}$  times heavier than water; consequently, its specific gravity is 19.362, and so of other bodies. Centre of gravity, that point at which all the weight of a mass might be collected without disturbing the equilibrium of any system of which the mass forms a part. When a body is suspended by a string, and allowed to find its position of rest, the centre of gravity is in the line of the string. Line of direction of gravity, a straight line which passes through the centre of gravity of a body towards the centre of the earth. If this line pass beyond the base on which the body stands, it must fall;—seriousness; sobriety of manners; solemnity of deportment or character; atrociousness; enormity.—Obsolete in the last two senses.

That had intended thereby only to punish the injury committed according to the gravity of the fact.—Holzer.

GRAVY, gra've, s. The fat and other liquid matter that drips from flesh in roasting.

GRAY.—See Grey.

GRAYLING, gra'ling, s. In Ichthyology, the Thymallus vulgaris, a British fish.

GYMNASIARCH, jim-na'ze-ârk, s. (gymnasion, a place of exercise, and archos, chief, Gr.) The officer that presided at the Grecian games.

GYMNASIUM, jim-na'ze-um, s. In ancient Greece, a place set apart for athletic exercises. These performances were executed in the presence of thousands; and perhaps one reason for the great pre-eminence of the ancients in sculpture was the vast patronage bestowed on such exhibitions, in which the artist could form his models from every variety of development the human body is susceptible of; wrestling, fencing, shooting, racing, and dancing, were the favourite exercises indulged in a school.

GYMNAST, jim'nast, s. (gymnastes, Gr.) A teacher of gymnastic exercises.

GYMNASTIC, jim-nas'tik, a. (gymnasticus, Lat.) Relating to athletic exercises of the body, intended for health, defence, or diversion, as running, leaping, wrestling, throwing the discus, the javelin, or the hoop, playing with balls, &c.;—s. athletic exercise.

GYMNASTICALLY, jim-nas'te-kal-le, ad. In a gymnastic manner; athletically.

GYMNASTICS, jim-nas'tiks, s. The Gymnastic art; the art of performing athletic exercises.

GYMNEMA, jim-ne'ma, s. (gymnos, naked, and nema, a filament, Gr. the stameneous corona being absent, the filaments are left naked.) A genus of plants, usually twining shrubs: Order, Asclepiadaceæ.

GYMNETES, jim-ne'tes, } s. (gymnetes, naked, Gr.)

GYMNETRUS, jim-ne'trus, } A genus of Ribbon-fishes, with excessively thin bodies; long ventral fins; the rays filiform or spatulate; type of the family Gymnetres, or Ribbon-fishes, the genera of which are all characterized by their long thin bodies, minute pectoral fins, and large truncate heads; eyes very large; mouth nearly vertical. In the subfamily Gymnetrinæ, the dorsals extend the whole length of the body; ventral very large, and no anal fin.

GYMNIC, jim'nik, } a. Relating to athletic

GYMNICAL, jim-ne-kal, } exercises of the body; performing athletic exercises.

GYMNOCANTHUS, jim-no-kan'thus, s. (gymnos, naked, and acantha, a spine, Gr.) A genus of fishes, having the spines of the head few and naked; the ventral fins very long; the caudal truncate: Family, Cottidae, or Bull-heads.

GYMNOCARPUS, jim-no-kâr'pus, s. (gymnos, naked, and karpos, a fruit, Gr.) A genus of under-shrubs: Order, Illecebraceæ.

NOTE.—This genus is spelt differently by different botanists. The above is that of Lindley: Gymnocarpus, gymnocarpus, gymnocarpum, being those of others.

GYMNOCEPHALUS, jim-no-sef'a-lus, s. (gymnos, naked, and kephale, the head, Gr. the head and base of the bill being entirely naked.) The Bald-tyrants, a genus of birds belonging to the Coraciæ, or Fruit-crows: Family, Corvidæ.

GYMNOCLADUS, jim-nok'la-dus, s. (gymnos, naked, and klados, a branch, Gr. from the naked appearance of the branches.) A genus of Leguminous trees, natives of Canada: Suborder, Cassalpinieæ.

GYMNODACTYLOS, jim-no-dak'te-lus, s. (gymnos, naked, and dactylos, a finger, Gr.) A genus of Saurian reptiles, belonging to the Gecko family.

GYMNODONTES, jim-no-don'tes, s. (gymnos, naked, and odont, a tooth, Gr.) A name given to a family of Malacopterygious fishes, of the order Phocognathes; the jaws, instead of teeth, are furnished with an ivory substance, internally divided into laminae, which, in their aggregate, have the appearance of a parrot's bill, and which, in fact, consist of true teeth united, that succeed each other as fast as they are destroyed; the opercula are small, and there are five rays on each side, all of which are almost completely hidden; they live on crustacea and sea-weed; their flesh is generally mucous, and that of some are considered as poisonous.

GYMNOGASTER, jim-no-gas'tur, s. (gymnos, naked, and gaster, the belly, Gr. from the ventral and anal fins being wanting.) A genus of fishes, of the tribe Gymnetres, or Ribbon-fishes.

GYMNOGENS, jim'no-jens, s. (gymnos, naked, and genna, I bring forth, Gr.) A name given by Lindley to an order of plants essentially exogenous in their organs of vegetation, except that their ova are fertilized by direct contact with the male principle. It comprises the natural orders Cycadeaceae, Pinaceae, or Coniferae, Taxaceae, and Gnetales, or Joint-firs.

GYMNOGRAMMA, jim-no-gram'ma, s. (gymnos, naked, and gramma, writing, Gr. in allusion to the naked sori upon the forked veins of the fronds, resembling Roman letters.) A genus of Ferns: Order, Polypodiaceae.

GYMNOLEPAS, jim-no-le-pas, s. (gymnos, naked, and lepas, a limpet, Gr.) A genus of the Cirripeda, the shell of which is rudimentary, and composed of small valves very much separated.

GYMNOMYZA, jim-no-mi'za, s. (gymnos, naked, and myza, a fly, Gr.) A genus of Dipterous insects of the tribe Muscidae: Family, Athericera.

GYMNOPHRYX, jim-nof'ris, s. (gymnos, naked, and ophrys, an eyebrow, Gr.) A genus of birds: Family, Meliphagidae, or Honey-suckers.

GYMNOPLEURUS, jim-no-plu'rus, s. (gymnos, naked, and pleura, a side or rib, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Scarabaeidae.

GYMNOSOMA, jim-nos-o-ma, s. (gymnos, naked, and soma, a body, Gr.) A name given by Blainville to such Pteropoda, or as he designates his order Aporobranchiata, as have no shells; such as have, he denominates Thecosoma.

GYMNOSOPHISTS, jim-nos-o-fists, s. (gymnos, naked, and sophistes, a sage, Gr.) A sect of ancient Indian moral philosophers, who lived in the woods, and went barefooted and nearly naked. They believed in the immortality of the soul, and its migration into several bodies. They were reputed as well-skilled in astronomy and physical science. They practised celibacy, abstained from wine, and lived on the fruits of the earth, placing the chief happiness of man in the contempt of riches and the pleasure of sensual indulgence. The name was also given to a sect of Anchorites, who lived in Ethiopia, near the sources of the Nile, without the accommodation of either houses or cells.

GYMNOSPERMA, jim-no-sper'ma, s. (gymnos, naked, and sperma, a seed, Gr.) A genus of Composite plants: Suborder, Tubuliflorae.

GYMNOSPERMÆ, jim-no-sperm'e, } s. (gymnos, GYMNOSPERMES, jim'no-sperms, } naked, and sperma, seed, Gr.) A name given by Brongniart and others to such plants as have naked seeds, as in the Pinaceae.—See Gymnogens.

GYMNOSTACHYS, jim-nos'ta-kis, s. (gymnos, naked, and stachys, a spike, Gr.) A genus of Leguminous plants, natives of New Holland: Suborder, Papilionaceae.

GYMNOSTOMUM, jim-nos'to-mum, s. (gymnos, naked, and stoma, the mouth, Gr. in allusion to the process called teeth at the orifice of the theca.) A genus of very minute moss-plants: Order, Bryaceae.

GYMNOTHORAX.—See Muræna.

GYMNOTUS, jim-no'tus, s. (gymnos, naked, and notus, the back, Gr.) A genus of Apodal fishes, with eel-shaped bodies; the branchial aperture is placed near the pectorals; the anal fin very long, and reaching to the end of the tail; dorsal fin wanting. The G. electricus possesses the remarkable property of communicating an electrical shock to the person or animal touching it: Family, Sternarchidae.

GYMNURA, jim-nu'ra, s. (gymnos, naked, and oura, a tail, Gr.) A genus of animals of the digitigrade kind, having the body robust, the ground of the fur soft, but with distinct subelongated harsh hairs; tail rather long, naked, and scaly; feet with narrow curved claws.

GYNÆCIAN, je-ne'se-an, a. Relating to women.

GYNÆOCRACY, jin-e-ok'ra-se, s. (gyne, woman, and kratos, rule, Gr.) A form of government in which women may preside.

GYNÆSEUM, je-ne'se-um, s. In ancient Architecture, that portion of a Grecian building set apart for the female portion of the family. In Botany, the pistil, or female organ of a plant.—The last signification is used by Ræper, not by British botanists.

GYNANDER, je-nau'dur, s. (gyne, a female, and aner andros, a male, Gr.) A plant belonging to the class Gynandria of Linnaeus; a plant whose stamens are inserted in the pistil.

GYNANDRIA, je-nan'dre-a, s. (gyne, a female or style, and aner andros, a male or stamen, Gr.) The twentieth class in the Linnæan system of botany, the plants of which are distinguished from all others by being furnished with a fleshy undivided process, round which the sepals radiate, and which supplies the place of stamens and style. It is formed of the natural order Orchidaceae.

GYNANDRIAN, je-nan'dre-an, } a. Belonging to GYNANDRIOUS, je-nan'dre-us, } the class Gynandria; orchideous.

GYNANDROPSIS, jin-an-drop'sis, s. (gyne, a female, aner andros, a male, and opsis, resemblance, Gr. from the stamens appearing as if inserted on the top of the ovary.) A genus of plants: Order, Capparidaceae.

GYNANDROUS, je-nan'drus, a. (gyne, a female, and aner andros, a male.) In Botany, having the stamens and style combined in one body.

GYNANTHROPE, je-nan'thrope, s. (gyne, a female, and anthropos, a male, Gr.) A hermaphrodite, who exhibits more of the male than of the female sex.

GYNARCHY, jin'ar-ke, s. (gyne, and arche, rule, Gr.) Government by a female.

GYNECOCRACY, jin-e-kok'kra-se, s. Petticoat government; female power.

GYNECOLOGY, jin-e-kol'o-je, s. (gyne, a female, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) The doctrine of the nature and diseases of women.

GYNECOMANIA, jin-e-ko-ma'ne-a, s. (gyne, a female, and mania, madness, Gr.) An inordinate love of women.

GYNOBASE, jin'o-base, s. (gyne, a female, and basis, a base, Gr.) In Botany, a fleshy receptacle, bearing separate fruits.

GYNOBASIC, jin-o-ba'sik, a. Having a gynobase.

GYNOCHTHODES, jin-ok-tho'dis, s. (gyne, a female, and ochthodes, warted, Gr. in reference to the warted stigma.) A genus of plants, natives of Java: Order, Cinchonaceae.

GYNOPACHYS, jin-o-pa'kis, s. (gyne, a female, and pachys, thick, Gr. in reference to the thick two-lobed stigma.) A genus of climbing shrubs, natives of Java: Order, Cinchonaceae.

GYNOPHORE, jin'o-fore, s. (gyne, a female, and phoreo, I bear, Gr.) In Botany, a lengthened receptacle, having the petals, stamens, and pistil, but not the calyx.

GYNOSTEMIUM—GYRE.

GYNOSTEMIUM, jin-o-ste'me-nūm, s. The column of an orchideous plant, or one belonging to a gynander.

GYNOSTEMMA, jin-o-stem'ma, s. (gyne, a female, and stemma, a crown, Gr. in reference to the ovaries being crowned by the permanent stigmas.) A genus of climbing shrubs, natives of Java: Order, Memispermaceæ.

GYNOUS, jin'us, a. (gyne, a female, Gr.) Having styles; flowers are said to be, 3-4-5-6-7, &c., gynous, when they contain so many styles.

GYPAETUS, je-pa'e-tus, s. (gyps, a vulture, and etes, one connected with or related to another, Gr.) A genus of rapacious birds: Family, Vulturidæ.

GYPSOUS, jip'se-us, } a. Of the nature of gyp-GYPSINE, jip'sine, } sum.

GYPSIFEROUS, jip-sif'e-rus, a. (gypsum, and fero, I bear, Lat.) Producing gypsum.

GYPSOCALLIS, jip-so-kal'lis, s. (gypsos, lime, and kallistos, most beautiful, Gr. in allusion to the beauty of the plants, and their generally inhabiting calcareous districts.) A genus of plants: Order, Ericaceæ.

GYPSOPHILLA, jip-so-fil'la, s. (gypsos, lime, and phileo, I love, Gr. on account of the plants growing chiefly in calcareous soils.) A genus of annual or perennial evergreen plants: Order, Caryophyllaceæ.

GYPSUM, jip'sum, s. (gypsos, Gr.) The anhydrous sulphate of lime, used extensively in the making of stucco, or plaster of Paris, and in agriculture as a manure. It occurs in the new red sandstone of England and Germany, and in the tertiary rocks of the neighbourhood of Paris, &c., foliated, fibrous, granular, and compact. The pure crystallized specimens of gypsum are sometimes called selenite, and the white compact variety used in statuary, alabaster. Gypsum, when pure, is snow-white; but it occurs red, yellow, blue, or grey, when impure. It consists of 1 atom of sulphuric acid, 1 of lime, and 2 of water: sp. gr. 2.32.  $H = 2.0$ .

GYPTOGERANUS, jip-to-je'r'a-nus, s. (gyps, a falcon, Gr. and gero, I carry, Lat.) The Secretary, a genus of birds: Family, Falconidæ.

GYRACANTHUS, je-r-a-kan'thus, or ge-r-a-kan'thus, s. (gyros, round, and akantha, a spine, Gr.) A genus of fossil Placoid fishes, found in the carboniferous system; the dorsal fin spines are of very frequent occurrence in the Coal formation of the west of Scotland, and are frequently from twelve to fifteen inches in length.

GYRAL, ji'ral, a. Whirling; moving in a circular form.

GYRATION, ji-ra'shun, s. (gyratio, Lat.) A turning or whirling round; a circular motion. Centre of gyration, when a system of heavy bodies, or any system possessing weight, has a fixed axis of revolution, the centre of gyration is a point at any such distance from the axis, that the moment of inertia would not be altered if the whole mass were collected at that point. The moment of inertia being found by multiplying every mass by the square of its distance from the axis, the distance of the centre of gyration is found by dividing this moment of inertia by the whole mass, and extracting the square root of the quotient.

GYRATORY, ji'ra-tur-e, a. Moving in a circle.

GYRE, jire, s. (gyrus, a circle, Lat.) A circular motion, or a circle described by a moving body; a turn;—v. a. to turn round.

GYRFALCON—GYVE.

GYRFALCON.—See Jerfalcon.

GYRINOPS, je'r'e-nops, or, according to Don, ge-re-nops', s. (gyros, a circle, and ops, appearance, Gr. in allusion to the circular tail of the seed.) A genus of plants, natives of Ceylon.

GYRINUS, je-ri'nus, s. (gyros, a circle, Gr.) The Whirligigs, a genus of Coleopterous insects, so named from their habit of swimming in circles upon the surface of the water; Family, Dytiscidæ.

GYROCARPUS, je-ro-kâr'pus, s. (gyros, a circle, and karpos, fruit, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Lauraceæ.

GYRODUS, je-ro'dus, s. (gyros, round, and odon, a tooth, Gr.) A genus of fossil fishes, the mouth of which was armed with rows of round grinding teeth in the palate, for crushing hard crustaceans and fishes. In very fine specimens, five rows, which were placed on the os vomer in the roof of the mouth, remain in the stone, though no other part of the head is preserved; but generally the teeth are loose, and were in that state termed Bufoites by the old writers (Llwyd, &c.) on organic remains.

GYROGONITES, je-rog'o-nitse, s. (gyros, round, and gonia, an angle, Gr.) The fossil fruits of Chara, a genus of plants found in many fresh-water ponds. The fossils are found in tertiary strata near Paris, the Isle of Wight, &c.

GYROIDINA, je-roy'de-na, s. (gyros, a circle, and ei'os, resemblance, Gr.) A genus of microscopic Foraminifera, belonging to the Holcostegus ammonidea of M. de Orbigny.

GYROLEPIS, je-rol'e-pis, s. (gyros, round, and lepis, a scale, Gr.) A genus of fossil fishes, the remains of which occur in new red sandstone, and the base beds of the Lias formation.

GYROMANCY, je-ro-man-se, s. (gyros, a ring, or circle, and man'cia, madness, Gr.) A species of divination, performed by drawing a circle and walking round it.

GYRON, ji'run, s. In Heraldry, an ordinary escutcheon, consisting of two lines from several parts of the escutcheon meeting in the fesse point.

GYRONCHUS, je-ron'kus, s. (gyros, round, and onychos, a nail, or claw, Gr.) A genus of fossil Ganoid fishes, from the oolite of Stonesfield.

GYROPHORA, je-rof'o-ra, s. (gyros, a circle, and phoreo, I bear, Gr. in allusion to the concentric circles, more or less complicated, observable in the disk of the receptacles of the shields.) A genus of Lichens: Tribe, Idiothalamæ.

GYROPRISTES, je-ro-pris'tes, s. (gyros, round, and pristes, a saw, Gr.) A genus of fossil Placoid fishes, from the new red sandstone near Belfast.

GYROPUS, je-ro'pus, s. (gyros, a circle, and pous, a foot, Gr.) A genus of parasitical insects, of the louse kind, which live on the guinea-pig.

GYROSE, je'ose, s. (gyros, a circle, Gr.) In Botany, turned round like a circle.

GYROSTEMON, je-ro-ste'mon, s. (gyros, a circle, and stemon, a stamen, Gr. in allusion to the stamens being twisted round each other in a circular manner.) A genus of plants, consisting of smooth branching shrubs from New Holland: Order, Tiliaceæ.

GYROSTEUS, je-ro-ste-us, s. (gyros, round, and osteon, a bone, Gr.) A genus of fossil Ganoid fishes, found in the Lias formation.

GYVE, jive, s. (gyvyn, Welsh.) A fetter or shackle for the leg;—v. a. to fetter; to shackle; to chain.

H.

H—HABEAS.

H is the eighth letter of the English alphabet. It is not properly a vowel, nor an articulation, but the mark of a stronger breathing than that which precedes the utterance of any other letter. It is pronounced with an expiration of breath, which, preceding a vowel, is perceptible by the ear at a considerable distance. Thus harm and arm, hear and ear, heat and eat, are distinguished at almost any distance at which the voice can be heard. In English, h is sometimes mute, as in honour and honest; also when united with g, as in right, fight, and brought. In which, what, who, whom, and some other words in which it follows w, it is pronounced before it, as hwich, hwoat, &c. As a numeral in Latin, H denotes 200, and with a dash over it thus, H̄, 200,000. As an abbreviation in Latin, H. stands for homo, hæres, hora, &c.

HA, hā, interj. An exclamation, denoting surprise, joy, or grief. With the long sound of a, it is used as a question, and is equivalent to 'What do you say?' When repeated, Ha, ha, it is an expression of laughter;—v. n. to express surprise; to hesitate.

HAAF, hāfe, s. Sbetland fishing-ground.

HABAKKUK, hab'ak-kūk, s. The name of one of the Hebrew prophets, and of the book which he wrote in the Old Testament. He flourished 610 years before Christ.

HABEAS CORPUS, hab'e-as kawr'pus, s. (from habeo, I hold, and corpus, the body, Lat.) In Law, a writ of right for those who are aggrieved by illegal imprisonment. By 31 Charles II. c. 2, commonly called the Habeas Corpus Act, the methods of obtaining this writ are pointed out and enforced, so that, as long as this statute remains unimpeached, no subject of England can be long detained in prison, except in those cases where the law requires and justifies such detention. There are various kinds of this writ made use of by our courts for removing prisoners from one court into another, for the more easy administration of justice; as—Habeas corpus ad respondendum, when a man has a cause of action against one who is confined by the process of some inferior court, in order to remove the prisoner, and charge him with this new action in the court above. Habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum, when a prisoner has had judgment against him in an action, and the plaintiff is desirous to bring him up to some superior court, to charge him with process of execution. Habeas corpus ad prosequendum, testificandum, deliberandum, &c., which issue when it is necessary to remove a prisoner in order to prosecute or bear testimony in any court, or to be tried in the proper jurisdiction wherein the fact was committed. Habeas corpus ad faciendum et recipiendum, which issues out of any of the courts of Westminster Hall, when a person is sued in some inferior jurisdiction, and is desirous to remove the action into the superior court, commanding the inferior judges to produce the body of the defendant, together with the day and cause of his caption and detention, (whence the writ is frequently denominated a habeas corpus cum causa), to do and receive whatsoever the king's court shall consider in that behalf. Habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, directed to the person detaining another, and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner, with the day and cause of his caption and detention, ad faciendum, subjiciendum, et recipiendum, to do, submit to, and receive whatsoever the judge or court awarding such writ shall consider in that behalf.—3 Bl. 129-131; 1 Bl. 135.

HABENARIA, hab-e-na're-a, s. (habena, a thong, or rein, Lat. on account of the thonglike spur of the flower.) A genus of plants: Order, Orchidaceæ.

HABENDUM, ha-ben'dum, s. (habeo, I hold, Lat.) In Law, there are various formal parts in deeds, of which the habendum is one; its office is only to limit the certainty of the estate granted: it is so called because it begins with the words to have. In every deed of conveyance there are two principal parts, viz.: the premises and the habendum; the office of the premises is to express the name of the grantor, the grantee, and the thing to be granted; the office of the habendum is to limit the estate, so that the general implication of the estate, which by construction of law passes in the premises, is by the habendum controlled and qualified.—4 Cruise, 289; Les Termes de la Ley.

HABERDASHER, hab'ur-dash-ur, s. (probably from habe, goods, and tauschen, I barter, Germ. but the etymology is much disputed.) A dealer in small wares.

HABERDASHERY, hab'ur-dash-ur-e, s. The goods and wares sold by a haberdasher.

HABERDINE, hab-ur-deen', s. A dried salted cod.

HABERE, ha-be're, v. a. (Latin.) To hold or possess. Habere facias possessionem, in Law, when a plaintiff recovers in a real or mixed action, whereby the seisin or possession of land is awarded to him, the writ of execution is either a habere facias possessionem, or writ of possession of a chattel interest, or a habere facias seisi-am, or writ of seisin of a freehold.—Finch, L. 470; 3 Bl. 412. The writ of habere facias possessionem is the process commonly resorted to by the successful party in an action of ejectment, for the purpose of being placed by the sheriff in the actual possession of the land recovered. Habere facias visum, a writ that formerly lay in various cases, as in dower, formodon, &c., where a view was required to be taken of the lands in question.—Tract. lib. 5, tract. 3, c. 8.

HABERGEON, ha-ber'je-on, s. (haubergeon, Fr.) A coat of mail or armour to defend the neck and breast. It is formed of little iron rings united, and descending from the neck to the middle of the body.

HABILE, hab'il, a. Fit; proper.—Obsolete.

HABILIMENT, ha-bil'e-ment, s. (habillement, Fr.)

A garment; dress; clothing; commonly used in the plural, habiliments.

HABILITATE, ha-bil'e-tate, v. a. (habilité, Fr.) To qualify;—a. qualified.—Obsolete.

HABILITATION, ha-bil-e-ta'shun, s. Qualification.—Obsolete.

The things are but habilitations towards arms; and what is habilitation without intention and act?—Escon.

HABILITY—HABITUDE.

HABILITY, ha-bil'e-te, s. Faculty; power; means: ability is now used.

Aladine, though meaner born,
And of less livelood and hability.—Spenser.

HABIT, hab'it, s. (French.) Garb; dress; in general, clothes or garments; a coat worn by ladies over other garments; state of anything, implying some continuance or permanence; temperament or particular state of a body; a disposition or condition of the mind or body, acquired by custom or a frequent repetition of the same act;—v. a. to dress; to clothe; to array;—v. n. to inhabit; to dwell in.—Obsolete as a neuter verb.

Nightingales,
That in their sweet song deliten,
In think places as they habiten.—Chaucer.

HABITABILITY, hab-e-ta-bil'e-te, s. State of being habitable.

HABITABLE, hab'e-ta-bl, a. (French.) That may be inhabited or dwelt in; capable of sustaining human beings.

HABITABLENESS, hab'e-ta-bl-nes, s. Capacity of being inhabited.

HABITABLY, hab'e-ta-ble, ad. In such a manner as to be habitable.

HABITANCE, hab'e-tans, s. Dwelling; abode; residence.—Obsolete.

What art thou man, if man at all thou art,
That here in desert hast thine habitanco?—Spenser.

HABITANCY, hab'e-tan-se, s. Legal settlement or inhabitancy.

HABITANT, hab'e-tant, s. (French, from habitans, Lat.) An inhabitant; a dweller; a resident; one who has a permanent abode in a place.

HABITAT, hab'e-tat, s. In Botany, habitation; native soil or country of a plant.

HABITATION, hab-e-ta'shun, s. (habitatio, Lat.) Act of inhabiting; state of dwelling; place of dwelling; place of abode; a settled dwelling; a mansion; a house or other place in which man or any animal dwells.

HABITATOR, hab'e-tay-tur, s. (Latin.) An inhabitant; a dweller.—Obsolete.

HABITED, hab'it-ed, a. Clothed; dressed; usual; accustomed.—Unusual in the last two senses.

This ancient and habited vice is amongst the Dutch, of late years, much decreased.—Fuller.

HABITUAL, ha-bit'u-al, a. (habituel, Fr.) Customary; accustomed; inveterate; established by frequent repetition; rendered permanent by continued causes.

HABITUALLY, ha-bit'u-al-le, ad. By habit; customarily; by frequent practice or use.

HABITUATE, ha-bit'u-ate, v. a. (habituere, Fr.) To accustom; to make familiar by frequent use or practice; to settle as an inhabitant in a place;—a. inveterate by custom; formed by habit.

HABITUATION, ha-bit-u-a'shun, s. The state of being habituated.

HABITUDE, hab'e-tude, s. (habitudo, Lat.) Customary manner or mode of life; repetition of the same acts; custom; habit; relation; respect; state with regard to something else;

It results from the very nature of things, as they stand in such a certain habitude, or relation to one another.—South.

familiarity; converse; frequent intercourse.—Seldom used in the last six senses.

To write well, one must have frequent habitudes with the best company.—Dryden.

HEART, hárt, s. (heort, Sax. hart, Dut.) In Anatomy, the most important organ of the viscera of mammiferous and other animals. In man, it is situated in the thorax, on the anterior part of the diaphragm, and divided externally into the base, which is the broad part; the superior and inferior surface; the anterior and posterior margin. Internally, it is divided into the two ventricles, right and left, which are separated from each other by a fleshy septum, called the septum cordis. The cavities adhering to the base are, from their resemblance in form, called the auricles. Each ventricle has two orifices: the one auricular, through which the blood enters; the other arterious, through which it passes out. These four orifices are supplied with valves which are distinguished, according to their form, into the semilunar, at the arterial orifices; tricuspid, those at the right orifice of the auricle; and mitral, those at the left. The vessels of the heart are distinguished into common and proper. The common are—1. The aorta, arising from the left ventricle. 2. The pulmonary artery, from the right ventricle. 3. The four pulmonary veins, which terminate in the left auricle. 4. The two venæ cavae, which empty themselves into the right auricle. The proper vessels are—1. The coronary arteries, which arise from the aorta, and are distributed on the heart. 2. The coronary veins. Heart of a fetus differs from that of an adult, by having a foramen ovale, by which the blood passes from the right auricle to the left;—the inner part of anything; the middle part or interior; the chief or vital part; the vigorous or efficacious part; the seat of the affections and passions; by a metonymy, heart is used for an affection or passion, and especially for love;

HEAT, heet, s. (heat, hæd, Sax.) In Physiology, the sensation experienced in touching a hot body, whether solid or seriform. In Chemistry, the supposed matter or cause of heat, termed caloric, which, if material, is an imponderable subtle fluid, the particles of which repel each other, and are attracted by all other substances, either by direct contact or radiation. Animal heat, the heat consequent on respiration and digestion in the bodies of animals, produced in the system of each by the oxygen of the atmosphere combining with the carbon of the blood, and forming carbonic acid gas. The human blood has a temperature varying from 100.6° to 101.75° in healthy persons; in disease it sometimes rises to 106° or 109°. Respiration is, says Dr. Gregory, essentially a combustion of carbon, which, in combining with oxygen, is converted into carbonic acid, and, at the same time, furnishes the animal heat. Liebig calculates that the amount of carbon burned daily in the human body of an adult man is about fourteen ounces, and the heat given out is fully sufficient to keep up

HEAVEN, hev'vn, s. (heafsen, hefen, heofsen, Sax.)

The region or expanse which surrounds the earth, and which appears above and around us like an immense arch or vault, in which are seen the sun, moon, and stars. Among Christians, the part of space in which the omnipresent Jehovah is supposed to afford more sensible manifestations of his glory. Hence, this is called the habitation of God, and is represented as the residence of angels and blessed spirits.

The sanctified heart loves heaven for its purity, and God for his goodness.—Buckminster.

The sky or air; the region of the atmosphere, or an elevated place, in a very indefinite sense. Thus, we speak of a mountain reaching to heaven; the fowls of heaven; the clouds of heaven; hail or rain from heaven;

heaven of heavens, or third heaven, the residence of Jehovah. Modern philosophers divide the expanse above and around the earth into two parts, the atmosphere or aerial heaven, and the ethereal heaven, beyond the region of the air, in which there is supposed to be a thin, unresisting medium, called ether. The ancient astronomers assumed as many heavens as they observed different celestial motions. They believed them to be solid and spherical, with the celestial bodies fixed in them. Thus, they had seven heavens corresponding to the orbits of the seven planets; an eighth for the fixed stars, which they particularly denominated the firmament. Ptolemy added a ninth, which he termed the primum mobile. Two crystalline heavens were afterwards added by King Alphonsus, to account for some irregularities in the motions of the other heavens; and, lastly, an empyrean heaven was drawn over the whole, as the residence of the Deity, which made twelve heavens; but others admitted many more into their several systems. Endoxus supposed that there were twenty-three; Callipus, thirty; Regionmontanus, thirty-three; and Aristotle, forty-seven.

HEAVEN-ASPIRING, hev'vn-as-pi'ring, a. Aspiring to enter heaven; impregnated with lofty desires.

HELICOID, hel'e-koyd, s. (helix, and eidos, likeness, Gr.) A geometrical figure.

HELICONIA, hel-e-ko'ne-a, s. (Helicon, in reference to its resemblance to Musa.) A genus of plants: Order, Musaceæ.

HELICONIAN, hel-e-ko'ne-an, a. Relating to Helicon, a mountain in Greece.

HELICONIUS, hel-e-ko'ne-us, s. (Helicon, in Greece.) A genus of Lepidopterous insects: Family, Diurna.

HELICOSPORUM, hel-e-kos'po-rum, s. (helix, a screw, and spora, a seed, Gr. in allusion to the twisted form of the spores.) A genus of Fungi: Suborder, Hyphomycetes.

HELICOSTIGA, hel-e-kos'to-ga, } s. (helicon, }
HELICOSTIGUA, hel-e-kos-tig'u-a, } thread spun } from the distaff, and stego, I cover, Gr.?) A name given by D'Orbigny to such Foraminifera as have the shells simple and arranged spirally.

HELICTERES, he-lik'te-res, s. (helix, a screw, Gr. from the carpels being twisted in a spiral manner.) A genus of plants, consisting of trees or shrubs: Order, Bombaceæ.

HELING, he'ling, s. The covering of the roof of a building: written also hilling.

HELIOCAMINUS, he-le-o-ka-mi'nus, s. (helios, the sun, and kaminos, a furnace or oven, Gr.) In ancient Architecture, the name given to an arched apartment heated by the rays of the sun.

HELIOCENTRIC, he-le-o-sen'trik, a. (helios, the sun, and kentron, a centre, Gr.) In Astronomy, an epithet applied to the place of a planet, as seen from the centre of the sun, in opposition to its geocentric place, as seen from the centre of the earth. Heliocentric longitude of a planet, the angle at the sun's centre, formed by the projection of its radius vector on the ecliptic, and the straight line drawn from the centre of the sun to the point of Aries. The heliocentric latitude of a place, the inclination of the straight line which joins its centre with that of the sun to the plane of the ecliptic. Heliocentric place of a planet, the place in the ecliptic in which the planet would appear, if viewed from the centre of the sun; and consequently, the heliocentric place coincides with the longitude of a planet viewed from the same centre.

HELIOCOMETES, he-le-o-ko-me'tis, s. (helios, and kometes, a comet, Gr.) A name used to denote a phenomenon which sometimes attends the setting of the sun. It seems to make a comet of that luminary, having the appearance of a large tail or column of light, which follows the sun at his setting, much in the same manner as the tail of a comet. It is likewise termed comets of the sun.

HELIOGRAPHIC, he-le-o-graf'fik, a. Pertaining to heliography.

HELIOGRAPHY, he-le-og'gra-fe, s. (helios, and grapho, I write, Gr.) The art of fixing images of objects by the Camera Obscura.

HERESIOGRAPHY—HERITABLE.

HERESIOGRAPHY, her-e-se-og'gra-fe, s. A treatise on heresy.

HERESY, her'e-se, s. (hairesis, Gr.) A vital error in religious belief, or an error of opinion in the meaning or interpretation of some particular tenet or doctrine of the church. This term had its origin in the struggles of the church for uncontrolled dominion over the minds and consciences of the people; whatever did not square with the precise interpretations of church conclaves on scriptural passages was deemed heresy, and the hardy offender was either called to renounce his conscientious convictions, or meet death in its worst or most torturing forms—hence the horrible persecutions and murders so rife in the earlier ages of Christianity, and which still throw a gloomy shadow over the benign doctrines of true religion. In Scripture and primitive usage, heresy merely meant sect or party, or the doctrines of a sect, and was synonymous with the modern use of denomination or persuasion, implying no reproach. In Law, an offence against Christianity, consisting in a denial of some of its essential doctrines, publicly avowed and obstinately maintained.

HOMAGE, hom'aje, s. (hummoge, Fr.) Obedience; respect paid by external action; reverence directed to the Supreme Being; devout affection; reverential worship. In Law, a ceremony which the feudal tenants had to perform at the time of investiture, on receiving a grant of lands from the lord. It was performed in the following manner: the vassal being uncovered and ungirt, knelt down before his lord, and putting his hand between those of his lord, said, devenio homo vester, de tenemento quod de vobis teneo, et tenere debeo, et fidem vobis portabo cōtra omnes gentes; the lord then embraced the tenant, which completed the homage. Fealty and homage have been often confounded by the feudal writers, but improperly; for fealty was a solemn oath of fidelity made by the vassal to the lord, whereas homage was merely an acknowledgment of tenure. When a man and his ancestors had immemorially holden land of another and his ancestors, by the service of homage, this was called homage ancestral. When sovereign princes did homage to each other for lands held under their respective sovereignties, a distinction was always made between simple homage, which was only an acknowledgment of tenure, and liege homage, which included the fealty before-mentioned, and the services consequent upon it. Homage of a court baron, a jury of persons who, on a party's admission to a copyhold estate, inquire into all matters respecting the same, which come to their knowledge or are given them in charge, and make presentment thereof; which presentment is an information to the lord or his steward of what has been transacted out of court: this kind of jury is sometimes termed the homage jury.—2. Bl. 300, 366; Watkins on Copyholds. Homagio respectuando, a writ directed to the escheator, commanding him to deliver seisin of lands to the heir who is of full age, notwithstanding his homage has not been made.—Les Termes de la Ley;—v. a. to reverence by external action; to pay honour to; to profess fealty.

caedo, I kill, Lat.) Relating to homicide; murderous; bloody.

HOMICIDE, hom'e-side, s. (homo, a human being, and caedo, I kill Lat.) In Law, the killing of any human creature. Blackstone enumerates three kinds of homicide, viz.: justifiable, excusable, and felonious. Justifiable homicide is of various kinds.
 Such as is owing to some unavoidable necessity, without any will, intention, or desire, and without any inadvertence or negligence in the party killing; as for instance, by virtue of such an office as obliges one, in the execution of public justice, to put a malefactor to death, who had forfeited his life by the laws and verdict of his country; this being an act of necessity, and even of civil duty, is considered by the law as justifiable. Excusable homicide is of two sorts, either per infortunium, by misadventure, or se defendendo, upon a principle of self-preservation. Homicide per infor- tunium, or misadventure, is when a man in doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another; as when a man is at work with a hatchet, and the head flies off and kills a bystander; or when a person qualified to keep a gun is shooting at a mark, and in so doing undesignedly kills a man, &c. Homicide in self- defence, or se defendendo, upon a sudden affray, is when a man in protecting himself from an assault or the like, in the course of a sudden broil or quarrel, kills him who assaults him, &c. Fel- onious homicide is the killing of a human creature of any age or sex, without justification or excuse, which may be done either by killing one's self, or another man. Felonious homicide, as applied to the killing of another man, is also divided into manslaughter and murder, both of which will be found under their respective titles.—4 Bl 176;

- HYBOS, hi'bos, s. (hybos, hump-backed, Gr.) A genus of Dipterous insects: Family, Tanyosoma.
- HYBOSORUS, hi-bos'o-rus, s. (hybos, bent, and oros, a margin, Gr.?) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Scarabæidæ.
- HYBRID, hi'brid, s. (hybris, a mule, Gr.) A plant or animal produced by parents belonging to a different genus or species. Hybrid goose, the Anas hybrida of Latham, a goose which inhabits the Archipelago of Chiloe, in South America.
- HYDARTHROS, hi-dâr'thus, s. (hydor, water, and arthron, a joint, Gr.) The white swelling. The joints most subject to it are the knee, elbow, wrist, and ankle.
- HYDATES, hi'da-tis, s. (Greek.) In Pathology, a term formerly applied to all encysted humours which contain an aqueous fluid.

HYDATICA—HYDRAL.

- HYDATICA, hi-dat'e-ka, s. (hydatois, watery, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Rhyacophora.
- HYDATIDOCELE, hi-da-te-do-se'le, a. A hernia-like swelling filled with hyatides.
- HYDATIDS, hi'da-tids, s. (hydatis, a bladder, Gr.) A term somewhat vaguely applied both to morbid cysts and to true Entozoons of the order Cystica. Of the latter, some are globular, with a tunic composed of a double albuminous membrane, between which the sporules or ova are developed.
- HYDATIGERA, hi-da-tij'e-ra, s. (hydatis, Gr.) A genus of vesicular Entozoary animals; the external cyst of which contains an almost always solitary worm. It comprises three species, one of which exists in the muscles of man.
- HYDATISM, hi'da-tizm, s. In Pathology, the sound occasioned by the fluctuation of an effused fluid in a cavity of the body.
- HYDATOID, hi'da-toyd, a. An epithet applied to the aqueous humour of the eye, and to the pellucid membrane by which the two chambers of that organ are invested.
- HIDE, } hide, s. A measure of land common in HIDE, } Doomsday-book and old English charters.
Quantity not exactly known.
- HYDNOCARPUS, hid-no-kâr'pas, s. (hynon, a tuber, and karpos, a fruit, Gr.) A genus of trees, natives of Ceylon: Order, Flacourtiacæ.
- HYDNOFHORA, hid-nof'o-ra, s. (hydor, water, or hynes, moist, and phoreo, I bear, Gr.) A genus of coralliferous polypifers: Family, Corticari.
- HYDNUM, hid'num, s. (hydnon, a species of fungus, Gr.) A very extensive genus of Fungi, found chiefly in moist situations upon the trunks of trees: Suborder or Tribe, Hymenomyces.
- HYDRA, hi'dra, s. (Greek.) In Mythology, a fabulous many-headed monster, which was said to infest the lake Lerna, in Peloponnesus. According to the fable, when one head was cut off, it was immediately succeeded by another, unless the wound was cauterized. It was one of the labours of Hercules to destroy this monster, which he is said to have accomplished by the constant application of firebrands to the wounds, as the heads were cut off. The term is likewise sometimes used in a metaphorical sense, to denote a manifold evil. In Astronomy, one of the ancient constellations of the southern hemisphere. In Zoology, a genus of gelatinous Polypi, the entire organization of which, according to Cuvier, consists of a small gelatinous horn, the edges of which are provided with filaments that act as tentacula: Order, Gelatinosi.
- HYDRACHNA, hi-drak'na, s. (hydor, water, and arachnes, a spider, Gr.) A genus of Arachnides: Family, Hyletra.
- HYDRACIDS, hi-dras'sids, s. Acids containing hydrogen as one of their essential elements, such as the hydrochloric or muriatic acid, the hydriodic acid, &c.
- HYDRAGOGUE, hi'dra-gog, s. (hydor, water, and ago, I expel, Gr.) In Therapeutics, applied to remedies which, like drastic purgatives and emetics, possess the property of evacuating serum effused into the organic tissues, or the cavities of the animal body.
- HYDRAL, hi'dral, s. (hydor, water, Gr.) A word used by Lindley for an alliance of plants, consisting of unisexual aquatic Endogens, with perfect or imperfect flowers, not arranged on a spadix, and without albumen. The Hydral alliance comprises the orders Hydrocharidaceæ, Naiadaceæ, and Zosteraceæ.

HYDRALES, hi-dra'les, s. The name given by Lindley to his Hydral alliance.

HYDRAMIDE, hi'dra-mide, s. The hyduret of amide or ammonia.

HYDRANGÆA, hi-dran'je-a, s. (hydor, water, and aggeion, a vessel, Gr. from some of the species growing in water, and the capsule being compared to a cup.) A genus of shrubs, with opposite leaves and corymbose flowers. The common hydrangæa is a native of China and Japan. It is much valued for its large flowers: Order, Saxifragaceæ.

HYDRANT, hi'drant, s. (hydor, water, Gr.) A pipe with the necessary valves, &c., by which water is raised and discharged from the main conduit of an aqueduct.

HYDRANTHELIUM, hi dran-'the'le-um, s. (hydor, and antheion, a little flower, Gr.) A genus of plants, with minute white flowers: Order, Scrophulariaceæ.

HYDRARGILITE.—See Wavelite.

HYDRARGOCHLORIDES, hi-drâr-go-klo'ride, s. Compounds of the bichloride of mercury with other chlorides, forming a class of haloid salts.

HYDRARGYLLITE, hi-drâr-jel-lite, s. (hydor, water, and argilla, clay, Gr.) A name given to the native phosphate of alumina, under the erroneous idea that it consisted of alumina and water.

HYDRARGYRIA, hi-drâr-je'r'e-a, s. (hydrargyrum, mercury, Lat.) In Pathology, a vesicular cutaneous eruption, attributed by modern writers to the action of mercury.

HYDRARGYROSIS, hi-drâr-je-ro'sis, s. Mercurial friction; the state of being rubbed with mercury.

HYDRARGYRUM, hi-drâr'je-rum, s. (Latin.) Quick-silver or mercury.

HYDRARSINE, hi-drâr-sine, s. An ethereal volatile product, soluble in water, and of an intolerably fetid smell. It is formed when air or oxygen is allowed to come very gradually in contact with alkarsine, for which—see Appendix.

HYDRARTHROSIS, hi-drâr-thro'sis, s. (hydor, water, and arthron, a joint, Gr.) Articular drops.

HYDRASPIS, hi-dras'pis, s. (hydor, water, and aspis, a shield, Gr.) A genus of River-tortoises, in which the sternum is narrow and solid, and the nostrils short and tubular: Family, Emydæ.

HYDRASTIS, hi-dras'tis, s. (hydor, water, Gr. in reference to its growing in humid places.) The Canadian Yellow-root, a genus of plants: Order, Ranunculaceæ.

HYDRATES, hi'drayts, s. Compounds containing water as one of their proximate elements, and in definite proportions.

HYDRAULIC, hi-draw'lik, } a. (hydraulique, HYDRAULICAL, hi-draw'le-kal, } Fr.) Relating to the conveyance of water through pipes.

HYDRAULICON, hi-draw'le-kon, s. (hydor, water, and aulos, a pipe, Gr.) The Water-organ, an ancient musical instrument acted upon by water. Its construction is now little known.

HYDRAULICS, hi-draw'liks, s. (hydor, water, and aulos, a pipe, Gr.) The science of the motion of fluids, and the construction of all kinds of machines relating thereto. Hydraulic-ram, or water-

HYDRELEUM—HYDROCARDIA.

ram, an ingenious hydraulic machine for raising water by means of its own impulse.

HYDRELEUM, hi-dre-le'um, s. (hydreleion, Gr.) A mixture of oil and water.

HYDRENCEPHALIC, hi-dren-sef'a-lik, a. In Pathology, an epithet applied to the scream uttered by children when suffering from acute hydrocephalus.

HYDRENCEPHALUS, hi-dren-sef'a-lus, s. (hydor, water, and enkephale, the brain, Gr.) Dropsy of the ventricles of the brain.

HYDRETEROCELE, hi-dren-te-ro-se'le, s. (hydor, water, and enteron, the intestine, Gr.) A hernial or intestinal swelling with a collection of serum.

HYDREPIFLOMPHALUS, 'hi-dre-pip-lom'fa-lus, s. (hydor, water, epiploom, the omentum, and omphalos, the navel, Gr.) Umbilical hernia, with serous effusion into the sac.

HYDRIODATES, hi'dre-o-dayts, s. In Chemistry, a genus of salts, resulting from the combination of hydriodic acid, a gaseous compound of hydrogen and iodine, with salifiable bases.

HYDRIODIC ACID, hi-dre-od'ik as'sid, s. A gaseous compound of hydrogen and iodine, obtained by the mutual decomposition of iodide of phosphorus and water.

HYDROA, hi'dro-a, s. (hydor, water, Gr.) In Pathology, a term of uncertain origin and signification, but probably used to denote a popular eruption of the skin, induced by heat or profuse perspiration.

HYDROBENZAMIDE, hi-dro-ben'za-mide, s. A substance obtained in large and regular crystals by the solution of hyduret of benzule with concentrated ammonia in alcohol, and by spontaneous evaporation. It forms regular octahedrons or rhombic prisms, and is colourless, tasteless, and inodorous. Formula,  $6HO + C_{42}H_{18}N_2$ .

HYDROBORACITE, hi-dro-bo'ra-site, s. (hydor, Gr. and boracite.) A mineral of a white colour, with spots of red, from silicated peroxide of iron, and very like both fibrous and foliated gypsum. It consists, according to Dr. Thomson, of 1 atom of magnesia, 4 of boracic acid, and  $5\frac{1}{2}$  of water; or, lime, 13.74; magnesia, 10.71; boracic acid, 49.22; water, 26.33: sp. gr. 1.9.

HYDROBROMATES, hi-dro-bro'mayts, s. A genus of salts, produced by the combination of hydrobromic acid with salifiable bases.

HYDROBROMIC ACID, hi-dro-brom'ik as'sid, s. A gaseous acid, composed of 78 bromine + 1 hydrogen; it is obtained by the mutual decomposition of bromide of phosphorus and water.

HYDROCANTHARIDÆ, hi-dro-kan-thar'e-de, s. (hydor, water, and cantharis, a scarab, Gr.) A family of aquatic Coleopterous insects.

HYDROCARBON, hi-dro-kâr'bon, s. A term applied by chemists to compounds of hydrogen and carbon.

HYDROCARBONATE, hi-dro-kâr'bo-nate, s. A carbonate combined with water, as the hydrocarbonate of magnesia, a mineral from New Jersey, which consists of 17 atoms of magnesia,  $13\frac{1}{2}$  of carbonic acid, and  $16\frac{1}{2}$  of water, with traces of silica and the peroxide of iron.

HYDROCARBONIC, hi-dro-kâr-bon'ik, a. An epithet used to denote an inflammable gas.

HYDROCARBURETS, hi-dro-kâr'bu-rets, s. Compounds of hydrogen and carbon.

HYDROCARDIA, hi-dro-kâr'de-a, s. (hydor, water, and kardia, the heart, Gr.) Dropsy of the pericardium.

HYDROCARYS—HYDROCOTYLEÆ.

HYDROCARYS.—See Halorgaceæ.

HYDROCELE, hi-dro-se'le, s. (hydor, water, and kele, a hernial tumour, Gr.) In Surgical Pathology, a collection of watery or serous fluid in the tunica vaginalis testis.

HYDROCEPHALUS, hi-dro-sef'a-lus, s. (hydor, and kephale, the head, Gr.) Dropsy of the brain, or water in the head.

HYDROCHÆRUS, hi-dro-ke'rus, s. (hydor, water, and chairo, I am delighted with, Gr.) The Water-cavy, a genus of Rodents, allied to the Guinea-pig.

HYDROCHARIDACEÆ, hi-dro-ka-re-da'se-e, s. (hydrocharis, one of the genera.) A natural order of Endogenous plants, belonging to the Hydral alliance of Lindley. It consists of floating or water plants, with parallel-veined leaves, which are sometimes spiny; flowers enclosed in a spathe; three sepals; three petals, sometimes absent; epigynous stamens, and an adherent ovary: natives of fresh water.

HYDROCHARIS, hi-drok'a-ris, s. (hydor, water, and charis, grace, Gr. from its being one of the prettiest ornaments of still waters.) A genus of aquatic plants: Order, Hydrocharidaceæ.

HYDROCHEMISTRY, hi-dro-kem'is-tre, s. That part of chemistry which relates more especially to water and other fluids.

HYDROCHLOA, hi-drok'lo-a, s. (hydor, water, and chloa, grass, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Graminaceæ.

HYDROCHLORATES, hi-dro-klo'myts, s. In Chemistry, a genus of salts, resulting from the combination of hydrochloric acid and salifiable bases.

HYDROCHLORIC ACID, hi-dro-klo'rik as'sid, s. A gaseous compound, consisting of 1 atom of chlorine = 36; and 1 atom of hydrogen, equiv. 37.

HYDROCHLORIDES, hi-dro-klo'ridse, s. A genus of salts, resulting from the combination of hydrochloric acid with salifiable bases.

HYDROCHIRSOCELE, hi-dro-ser-so-se'le, s. (hydor, water, kirso, a varix, and kele, a hernial tumour, Gr.) Water complicated with a varicose state of the veins of the spermatic cord.

HYDROCOBALTO-CYANATES, hi-dro-ko-bal'to-si'a-nayts, s. A genus of salts, formed by the combination of the hydrocobalto-cyanic acid with salifiable bases. Hydrocobalto-cyanic acid, formula, Cky + 3H; equiv. 220.34.

HYDROCORISÆ, hi-dro-kor'e-se, s. (hydor, and koris, a bug, Gr.) The name of a tribe of Hemipterous insects, including the Water-bugs; these differ from the Geocorisæ, or Land-bugs, in having minute antennæ inserted beneath the eyes. This tribe includes the Water-scorpions, Nepidæ, and the Boatmen, Notonectidæ.

HYDROCOTYLE, hi-dro-kot'e-le, s. (hydor, water, and kotyle, a cavity, Gr. in reference to the plants growing in moist situations.) Pennywort, a genus of Umbelliferous plants: Type of the tribe Hydrocotyleæ.

HYDROCOTYLEÆ, hi-dro-ko-til'e-e, s. (hydrocotyle, one of the genera.) A tribe of Umbelliferous plants, belonging to the suborder Orthospermeæ, characterized by the fruit being contracted from the sides; mericarps convex, rarely acute on the back, with the five primary ribs obsolete; lateral ones marginating, or thrown back into the commissure, which is flat.

HYDROCYANATES, hi-dro-si'a-nayts, s. In Chemistry, a genus of salts, resulting from the combination of hydrocyanic acid with salifiable bases.

HYDROCYANIC ACID, hi-dro-si-an'ik as'sid, s. A constituent of the water distilled from the leaves of several stem fruits, and is formed by the destructive distillation of many substances containing nitrogen, by the decomposition of formate of ammonia by heat, and of the cyanides by acids. It has a peculiar penetrating odour, similar to that of bitter almonds, checks the breathing, and causes a flow of tears. It possesses a penetrating taste, which is somewhat burning, and strongly bitter; its vapour, when inhaled, acts instantly as a most powerful poison.

HYDROCYON, hi-dro-si'on, s. (hydor, water, and kyon, a doz, Gr.) A genus of fishes, belonging to the Salmoninæ, or Salmones, in which the jaws are produced, the upper strongly angulated, and both furnished with acute unequal teeth: Family, Salmonidæ.

HYDROCYSTIS, hi-dro-sis'tis, s. (hydor, and kystis, a bladder, Gr.) A cyst containing a serous fluid.

HYDRODEPHAGA.—See Dytiscidæ.

HYDRODERMA, hi-dro-der'ma, s. (hydor, water, and derma, the skin, Gr.) Dropsy of the skin.

HYDRODYNAMICS, hi-dro-di-nam'iks, s. (hydor, water, and dynamis, power, Gr.) The science which applies the principles of dynamics to determine the conditions of motion or rest in fluid bodies. It is divided into two branches—hydrostatics and hydraulics,—which see.

HYDROESSA, hi-dro-es'sa, s. (hydor, and essomai, I am less, Gr.) A genus of minute, microscopic, aquatic, hemipterous insects: Family, Nepidæ.

HYDROFEROCYANIC ACID, hi-dro-fer-o-si-an'ik as'sid, s. An acid obtained in solution from the ferrocyanite of potash, by the action of sulphure acid on a solution of that salt.

HYDROFERRID-CYANATES, hi-dro-fer'rid-si'a-nayts, s. A genus of salts, formed by the combination of hydroferrid-cyanic acid with salifiable bases. Hydroferrid-cyanic acid, the formula of which is Cfdy + 3H; equiv. 217.34.

HYDROFLUATES, hi-dro-flu'ayts, s. Salts formed by the hydrofluoric acid with bases—called fluates by some, and fluorides by others.

HYDROFLUORIC ACID, hi-dro-flu-o'rik as'sid, s. A highly volatile and corrosive liquid. Its constitution is not known with any degree of certainty, as its basis, fluorine, has not yet been obtained in an insulated form.

HYDROFLUOSILICATES, hi-dro-flu-o-sil'e-kayts, s. Salts formed by the hydrofluosilicic acid with salifiable bases.

HYDROFLUOSILICIC ACID, hi-dro-flu-o-sil-is'ik as'sid, s. A compound acid, consisting of one atom of hydrofluoric, and two of silicic acid.

HYDROGALE, hi'dro-gale, s. (French, from hydor, water, and gala, milk, Gr.) A mixture of water and milk.

HYDROGEN, hi'dro-jen, s. (hydor, water, and gennao, I produce, Gr.) A colourless, inodorous, tasteless body, always gaseous when uncombined; a powerful refractor of light; the lightest body in nature, and hence the best material for filling balloons. Its equivalent is 1; symb. H. With oxygen it constitutes water—hence the name.

HYDROGENATE—HYDROMETRA.

HYDROGENATE, hi'dro-je-nate, } v. a. To combine HYDROGENIZE, hi'dro-je-nize, } hydrogen with something else.

HYDROGENATED, hi-droj'e-nay-ted, a. Combined with hydrogen.

HYDROGENOUS, hi-droj'e-nus, a. Pertaining to hydrogen; containing hydrogen.

HYDROGLOSSA, hi-dro-glos'sa, s. (hydor, water, and glossa, the tongue, Gr.) The salivary duct which constitutes the seat of the swelling in Ranula.

HYDROGNOSY, hi-drog'no-se, s. (hydor, water, and gnosis, knowledge, Gr.) The history and description of the waters of the terrestrial globe.

HYDROGRAPHER, hi-drog'gra-fur, s. (hydor, water, and grapho, I write, Gr.) One who draws maps of the sea, lakes, or other waters, with the adjacent shores; one who describes the sea or other waters.

HYDROGRAPHIC, hi-dro-gra'fik, } a. (hydor, HYDROGRAPHICAL, hi-dro-gra'f'e-kal, } water, and grapho, I describe, Gr.) Relating to or containing a description of the sea, sea-coast, isles, depth of water, shoals, &c., or of a lake; pertaining to hydrography. Hydrographical charts, or maps, usually called sea-charts, are projections of some part of the sea or coast for the use of navigators.

HYDROGRAPHY, hi-drog'gra-fe, s. The art of measuring and describing the sea, lakes, rivers, and other waters; or the art of forming charts of the sea.

HYDROGGRETED, hi-drog'u-ret-ed, a. Denoting a compound of hydrogen with a base.

HYDROLEA, hi-dro'le-a, s. (hydor, water, and elaina, an olive, Gr. in reference to the habitat of the species, and their oiliness.) A genus of plants, annual or perennial: Order, Hydrophyllaceæ.

HYDROLITE, hi'dro-lite, s. (hydor, water, and lithos, a stone, Gr.) A crystallized snow-white mineral. The crystal, figured by Dr. Thomson, is a double-sided pyramid, with the apices truncated by a short six-sided prism. It consists of silica, 39.896; alumina, 12.968; peroxide of iron, 8.270; potash, 9.000; water, 29.866: sp. gr. 2.054.  $H = 4.00$ .

HYDROLOGICAL, hi-dro-loj'e-kal, a. Relating to hydrology.

HYDROLOGY, hi-drol'o-je, s. (hydor, water, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) That part of natural history which treats of water, its properties, modes of existence, &c.

HYDROMANCY, hi'dro-man-se, s. (hydor, water, and manteia, divination, Gr.) Among the ancients, a method of divination by water. Varro ascribes its origin to the Persians, and Numa Pompilius is said to have had recourse to it, in order to settle the ceremonies of religion.

HYDROMANTIC, hi-dro-man'tik, a. Pertaining to divination by water.

HYDROMEDIASTINUM, hi-dro-me-de-as'te-num, s. (hydor, water, Gr. and mediastinum.) Effusion of serum into the mediastinum.

HYDROMEL, hi'dro-mel, s. (hydromeli, Gr.) Honey and water diluted in equal parts.

HYDROMETER, hi-drom'e-tur, s. (hydor, water, and metron, a measure, Gr.) An instrument used in the measurement of fluids.

HYDROMETRA, hi-dro-me'tra, s. (hydor, water, and metron, a measure, Gr.) A genus of Hemipterous insects: Family, Geocorisæ. In Pathology, dropsy of the womb.

HYDROMETRIC—HYDROPHILAX.

HYDROMETRIC, hi-dro-met'rik, } a. Relating HYDROMETRICAL, hi-dro-met're-kal, } to a hydrometer, or the measurement of the gravity, &c. of fluids, made by a hydrometer.

HYDROMETRIZÆ, hi-dro-met're-de, s. (hydor, water, and metron, Gr.) A family of Geocorisæ, or Land-bugs, but of aquatic habits; not, however, living in water, but frequenting the surface.

HYDROMPHALUS, hi-drom'fa-lus, s. (hydor, water, and omphalus, the navel, Gr.) A tumour formed by accumulation of serum in the sac of umbilical hernia; or simply, distention of the navel by the fluid of ascites.

HYDROMYRINGA, hi-dro-mi'ring-ga, s. (hydor, water, and myringa, or myrinx, a barbarous Latin name of the membrana tympani.) Dropsy of the tympanum.

HYDROMYS, hi'dro-mis, s. (hydor, water, and mys, a rat, Gr.) The Water-rat, a genus of Rodents, natives of Australia.

HYDRONOSIS, hi-dro-no'sis, s. (hydor, water, and nosis, a disease, Gr.) Ephemeral fever, with perspiration; according to some writers, the sweating sickness.

HYDRO-OXALIC ACID, hi-dro-oks-al'ik as'sid, s. A peculiar acid formed during the action of nitric acid on sugar, gum, and other substances.

HYDROPELTIDÆ, hi-dro-pel-tid'e-e, s. The Cabomaceæ of Lindley,—which see.

HYDROPELTIS, hy-dro-pel'tis, s. (hydor, water, and pelte, a shield, Gr.) A genus of aquatic plants, belonging to the order Hydropeletideæ of De Candolle, or Cabomaceæ of Lindley.

HYDROPERICARDIUM, hi-dro-per-e-kâr'de-um, s. (hydor, water, and pericardion, the pericardium, Gr.) Dropsy of, or an unnatural accumulation of watery fluid in, the sac of the heart.

HYDROPERITONEUM, hi-dro-per-e-to-ne'um, s. (hydor, water, Gr. and peritoneum.) Dropsy of the peritoneum.

HYDROPER-SULPHURIC, hi-dro-per-sul-fu'rik, a. Denoting an acid from sulphur and hydrogen.

HYDROPER-SULPHURIC ACID, hi-dro-per-sul-fu'rik as'sid, s. Bisulphuret of hydrogen, a compound of two equivalents of sulphur and one of hydrogen; its equivalent is 33.

HYDROPHANE, hi'dro-fane, s. (hydor, water, and phaino, I shine, Gr.) A variety of opal, which is white and opaque when dry, but is transparent when placed in water.

HYDROPHANOUS, hi-drof'a-nus, a. Made transparent by immersion in water.

HYDROPHIDÆ, hi-drof'e-de, } s. (hydor, water,
HYDROPHIDES, hi-drof'e-des, } and ophis, a serpent, Gr.) The Water-serpents, in which the body and the tail are compressed, the nostrils operculated, and the upper jaws furnished with poisonous fangs: Order, Ophrphides.

HYDROPHILIDÆ, hi-dro-fil'e-de, s. (hydrophilus, one of the genera.) A family of Coleopterous insects, of the tribe Lamellicornes of Swainson.

NOTE.—The Lamellicornes, Clavicornes, &c., constitute families in Cuvier, whose tribes are subdivisions of families, and not, as properly in Swainson, the family a subdivision of the tribe. This will account for such terms being sometimes used in the Dictionary, both as families and tribes—these terms being taken as given in the different arrangements of the authors referred to.

HYDROPHILAX, hi-dro-fi'laks, s. (hydor, water, and phylax, a guardian or keeper, Gr. from the plant always growing on the sea-side.) A genus of glabrous creeping herbaceous plants: Order, Cinchonaceæ.

HYDROPHILUS, hi-dro'f'e-lus, s. (hydor, water, and phileo, I love, Gr.) A genus of aquatic Coleopterous insects, type of the subfamily Hydrophilidæ.

HYDROPHITE, hi'dro-fite, s. (hydor, water, and phyton, a plant, Gr.) A plant which lives and grows in water.

HYDROPHLOGOSIS, hi-dro-flo-go'sis, s. (hydor, water, and phlogosis, inflammation, Gr.) Inflammation, terminating in serous effusion.

HYDROPHOBIA, hi-dro-fo-be-a, s. (Greek.) Literally, a dread of, or extreme aversion to water; the disease of canine madness.

HYDROPHOBIC, hi-dro-fo'bik, a. Relating to a dread of water, or canine madness.

HYDROPHORATES, hi-dro'fho-rayts, s. (hydor, and phoron, fluor, Gr.) A genus of salts, resulting from the combination of hydrophthoric acid, formerly fluoric acid.

HYDROPHYLLACEÆ, hi-dro-fil-la'se-æ, s. (hydrophyllum, one of the genera.) The Hydrophyllaceæ of Robert Brown, a natural order of Exogenous plants, consisting of trees, herbs, and shrubs, often hispid; leaves often lobed and alternate, or the lower ones opposite; stamens alternate with the petals; corolla monopetalous, hypogenous, regular, and shortly five-cleft; calyx deeply five-cleft; ovary superior; two long styles; two stigmas; fruit capsular and two-valved.

HYDROPHYLLACIA, hi-dro-fil-la'se-a, s. (hydor, water, and phyllon, a leaf, Gr.) A word sometimes used to denote great reservoirs of water, which are supposed to be placed in the Alps and other mountains, to supply the rivers which permeate the lower countries.

HYDROPHYLLUM, hi-dro-fil'lum, s. (hydor, water, and phyllon, a leaf, Gr.) A genus of plants, type of the order Hydrophyllaceæ.

HYDROPHYSOCLE, hi-dro-fe-so-se'le, s. (hydor, water, physa, wind, and kele, a hernial tumour, Gr.) Hernia, containing serum and gas.

HYDROPHYSOMETRA, hi-dro-fe-so-me'tra, s. (hydor, water, and metra, the womb, Gr.) An accumulation of serum and gas in the cavity of the womb.

HYDROPHYTOLOGY, hi-dro-fe-to'l'o-je, s. (hydor, water, phyton, a plant, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) A discourse or treatise on water-plants.

HYDROPIC, hi-dro'pik, a. (hydrops, Lat.)

HYDROPICAL, hi-dro-p'e-kal, a. Dropsical; diseased with extravasated water; containing water; resembling water or dropsy.

HYDROPIFLOCELE, hi-dro-pip-lo-se'le, s. (hydor, water, Gr. and epiflocele.) Omental hernia, complicated with serous effusion into the sac, or with hydrocele.

HYDROPITYON, hi-dro-pit'e-on, s. (hydor, water, and pitys, a pine, Gr.) A genus of plants, natives of Malabar and the East Indies: Order, Carophyllaceæ.

HYDROPNEUMATIC, hi-dro-nu-mat'ik, s. (hydor, and pneumatikos, air, Gr.) An epithet given to a vessel of water, with other apparatus, for chemical experiments.

HYDROPNEUMATIC TROUGH.—See Pneumatic Trough.

HYDROPOIDES—HYDROSCYAMINE.

dor, pneumon, a lung, and sarz, flesh, Gr.) An abscess containing water, air, and flesh, probably a collection of extravasated blood, from which, during its decomposition, gas has been extricated.

HYDROPOIDES, hi-dro-po'e-des, s. (hydor, water, and poieo, I produce, Gr.) A term applied to the watery excretions of a dropsical patient.

HYDROPORUS, hi-dro-p'o-rus, s. A genus of aquatic Coleopterous insects: Family or Tribe, Dytiscidæ.

HYDROPS, hi'drops, s. (hydor, water, and opsis, appearance, Gr.) A generic term in Nosology, comprehending every morbid accumulation of serum in the cavities or areolæ, naturally lubricated by that fluid, or in cysts and cavities of adventitious formation.

HYDROPTALMIA, hi-dro-ptal'me-a, s. (hydor, water, and ophthalmos, the eye, Gr.) Dropsy of the eye.

HYDROPTILA, hi-dro-pt'e-la, s. (hydor, water, and ptilon, a feather, Gr.) A genus of Neuropterous insects: Family, Plicipennes.

HYDROPYRAMIDS, hi-dro-per'a-mids, s. (hydor, water, and pyramis, a pyramid, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Verbenaceæ.

HYDROPYRETIC, hi-dro-pi-ret'ik, a. (hydor, water, and pyr, fever, Gr.) Suffering from, or connected with, sweating fevers.

HYDROPYXIS, hi-dro-pik'sis, s. (hydor, water, and pyxis, a box, Gr. the plant being an inhabitant of water, and the capsule resembling a box, from its opening transversely.) A genus of plants, natives of Louisiana: Order, Paronychiaceæ.

HYDRORACHIS, hi-dro-r'a-kis, s. (hydor, and rachis, the spine, Gr.) A collection of serum in the membranes of the spinal cord; dropsy of the spinal canal. This disease may exist with or without lesion of the osseous parietes.

HYDRORACHITIS, hi-dro-r-a-ki'tis, s. (hydor, and rachis, the spine, Gr.) A tumour upon the spine of infants, at first of a blue colour, but afterwards becomes translucent. It is attended with paralysis of the lower limbs, and is usually fatal.

HYDRORCHITIS, hi-dro-r-ki'tis, s. (hydor, water, and orchis, a testicle, Gr.) Inflammation of the testis, which terminates in serous effusion.

HYDROSALTS, hi'dro-saw'ts, s. Salts, the acid re base of which is a compound, containing hydrogen as one of its elements.

HYDROSARCA, hi-dro-sâr'ka, s. (hydor, water, and sarz, flesh, Gr.) A tumour, according to Severinus, which contains water and masses of flesh.

HYDROSARCOCELE, hi-dro-sâr-ko-se'le, s. (hydor, water, sarz, flesh, and kele, a hernial tumour, Gr.) A swelling formed by dropsy of the tunica vaginalis, and by scirrhous or carcinomatous enlargement of the body of the testis.

HYDROSAURUS, hi-dro-saw'rus, s. (hydor, water, and sauros, a saurian reptile, Gr.) A genus of Saurian reptiles, in which the scales are separated from each other by an annular series of minute tubercles, and embedded in the skin; the ridge of the tail rounded and carinated. These saurians are large in size, and are analogous to the crocodiles.

HYDROSCOPE, hi'dro-sko-pe, s. (hydor, water, and skopeo, I survey, Gr.) An instrument anciently used for the measurement of time; a kind of water-clock.

HYDROSCYAMINE, hi-dro-si'a-mîn, s. A poisonous substance, having a penetrating, narcotic, and stupefying odour, like that of nicotine, discovered by Geiger and Hesse in Hioscyanus niger: formula unknown.

HYDROSELENATES, hi-dro-se'le-nayts, s. (hydor, water, Gr. and selenite.) In Chemistry, a family of salts, resulting from the combination of hydro-selenic acid with salifiable bases. Hydro-selenic acid is also termed seleniureted acid: according to Berzelius, it consists of one equivalent of selenium and one of hydrogen. Its equivalent is 40.6; its symbol, Hse.

HYDROSTATIC, hi-dro-stat'ik, } a. (hydor, and HYDROSTATICAL, hi-dro-stat'e-kal, } statikos, stationary, Gr.) Relating to the science of weighing fluids, or hydrostatics.

HYDROSTATICALLY, hi-dro-stat'e-kal-le, ad. According to hydrostatics, or to hydrostatic principles.

HYDROSTATICS, hi-dro-stat'iks, s. (hydor, water, and stao, I stand, Gr.) That branch of hydrodynamics which relates to the pressure and equilibrium of the fluids commonly called non-elastic, as water, mercury, &c. Hydrostatic press (commonly called Bramah's press, from the name of the engineer who brought it into general use,) is a machine by which an enormous amount of pressure may be obtained through the medium of water. Hydrostatic paradox, a term often used to designate that principle in hydrostatics, by which a very small quantity of water may be made to overcome a very great weight. Hydrostatic index, an apparatus for demonstrating the truth of Pascal's hydrostatic paradox. Hydrostatic bellows, an apparatus for illustrating the hydrostatic paradox. Hydrostatic balance, a balance used for weighing substances in water, for the purpose of ascertaining their specific gravities.

HYDROSULPHATES, hi-dro-sul'fayts, } s. In HYDROSULPHURETS, hi-dro-sul'fu-rets, } Chemistry, a genus of salts, resulting from the combination of hydrosulphuric acid with salifiable bases.

HYDROSULPHURETED, hi-dro-sul'fu-ret-ed, a. Combined with sulphureted hydrogen.

HYDROSULPHURIC ACID, hi-dro-sul-fu'rik as'sid, s. Sulphureted hydrogen.

HYDROTELLURATES, hi-dro-tel'u-rayts, s. A genus of salts, resulting from the combination of an acid composed of hydrogen and tellurium with salifiable bases.

HYDROTHORAX, hi-dro-tho'raks, s. (hydor, water, and thorax, the chest, Gr.) A disease caused by a collection of water in the chest.

HYDROTIC, hi-dro'tik, a. Causing a discharge of water; a medicine to purge off water or phlegm. As a substantive, this word is synonymous with hydrogogue.

HYDROTITES, hi-dro-ti'tis, s. (hydor, water, and ous, otis, the ear, Gr.) Dropsy of the ear.

HYDROTICHE, hi-drot're-ke, s. (hydor, water, and trix, trichos, a hair, Gr. in reference to the hair-like submerged leaves and habitation of the plant.) A genus of plants, natives of Madagascar: Order, Scrophulariaceæ.

HYDROUS, hi'drus, a. (hydor, water, Gr.) Watery, or anything containing water in its composition.

HYDROXANTHIC ACID, hi-droks-an'thik as'sid, s. An acid discovered by Zeise of Copenhagen, since considered as an oxy-acid, and described as xanthic acid. It is the carbosulphuric acid of some chemists, being a compound of two volumes of bisulphuret of carbon, and one volume of sulphuric ether.

HYDRUS, hi'drus, s. (hydor, water, Gr.) The Water-snake, a genus of Ophidian reptiles or serpents, in which the head is small, the snout obtuse, and the upper part covered with large plates; the body and belly covered with rows of large scales: Family, Hydrophidæ. In Astronomy, the Water-snake, a constellation in the southern hemisphere, formed by Lacaille.

Cerastes horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear.—Milton.

HYEMAL, hi'e-mal, a. (from hiems, winter, Lat.) Belonging to winter; done in winter. Also, in Medicine and Natural History, an epithet employed to designate morbid affections of certain animals which occur especially or exclusively in winter.

Beside vernal, estival, and autumnal made of flowers, the ancients had also hyemal garlands.—Sir T. Brown.

HYEMANTES, hi-e-man'tes, s. (Greek.) A class of offenders in the primitive church, whose enormities were of so great a nature that they were not allowed to enter the porch of the churches; but were obliged to stand without, exposed to all the inclemency of the weather.

HYEMATE, hi'e-mate, v. n. To winter at a place.—Obsolete.

HYEMATION, hi-e-ma'shun, s. (hiemo, to winter, Lat.) Shelter from the cold of winter.

HYGEIA, hi-je'a, s. In Mythology, the goddess of Health, daughter or wife of Æsculapius. Her statues sometimes represented her as attended by a large serpent coiled round the body, and as elevating her arm to drink a cup which she held in her hand.

HYGEIAN, hi-je-an, a. (hygieia, the goddess of Health, Gr.) Sound or healthy; relating to health; relating to the goddess of Health.

HYGIEINA, hi-je-i'na, } s. Health, or the art or HYGIEINE, hi-je-i'ne, } science of preserving health;
HYGIENE, hi-ji'ene, } that department of medicine which treats of the preservation of health.

HYGIEST, hi-je-est, s. A name assumed by the vendors of certain universal vegetable medicines.

HYGROBLEPHARIC, hi-gro-blef'a-rik, a. (hydor, water, and blepharon, the eyelid, Gr.) In Anatomy, an epithet applied to the excretory ducts, and their orifices, of the lachrymal gland.

HYGROCROCIS, hi-grok'ro-sis, s. (hygros, belonging to water, and krokis, a little tuft, Gr.) A genus of Algae, of the suborder or tribe Confer-voides.

HYGROLOGY, hi-grol'o-je, s. (hygros, moist, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) A medical term, implying the doctrine of the humours or fluids of the body.

HYGROMETER, hi-grom'e-tur, s. (hydor, water, and metron, a measure, Gr.) An instrument used for measuring the degrees of moisture or dryness of the atmosphere.

HYGROMETRIC, hi-gro-met'rik, } a. Applied HYGROMETRICAL, hi-gro-met're-kal, } to substances which easily become moist and dry with corresponding changes in the state of the atmosphere, or which readily retain or absorb moisture; pertaining to hygrometry; made by or according to the hygrometer.

HYGROMETRY—HYMEN.

HYGROMETRY, hi-grom'e-tre, s. The act or art of measuring the moisture of the air.

HYGROPHILA, hi-grof'e-la, s. (hygros, moist, and phileo, I love, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Acanthaceæ.

HYGROSCOPE, hi-gro-sko-pe, s. (hygros, moist, and sko-peo, I view, Gr.) An instrument by means of which changes in the condition of the atmosphere with respect to moisture are detected.

HYGROSCOPIC, hi-gro-skop'ik, a. Relating to the hygroscope.

HYGROSTATICS, hi-gro-stat'iks, s. The science of comparing degrees of moisture.

HYKE, hike, s. A blanket or loose garment.

HYLA, hi'la, s. (hyle, a wood, Gr.) The Tree-frogs, a genus of amphibious reptiles, in which the toes are dilated at their extremities: Order, Anoura.

HYLACIUM, hi-la'she-um, s. (aulax, a furrow, Gr. in reference to the style and stigma being furrowed.) A genus of plants, natives of Western Africa: Order, Cinchonaceæ.

HYLEUS, hi-le'us, s. (hyle, a wood, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Xylophagi.

HYLARCHICAL, hi-lár'ke-kal, a. (hyle, and arche, rule, Gr.) Presiding over matter.

HYLEOSAURUS, hi-le-o-saw'r-us, s. (hyle, a wood, and sauros, a lizard, Gr.) A name given by Dr. Mantell to an extinct gigantic genus of reptiles, the fossil remains of which he discovered in the wealden strata of Sussex.

HYLESINUS, hi-le'se-nus, s. (hyle, a wood, and sinomai, I destroy, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Xylophagi.

HYLIOTIS, hi-le-o'tis, s. (hyle, a bush or brushwood, and ous, an ear, Gr.) A genus of birds, belonging to the Muscipapine, or Fly-catchers: Family, Muscipapideæ.

HYLOBATES, hi-lo-ba'tis, s. (hyle, a wood, and bates, I walk, Gr.) The gibbons or long-armed Apes, a genus of the Quadrumana, distinguished by the great length of their anterior extremities.

HYLOBIUS, hi-lo-be-us, s. (hylobios, living in the woods, from hyle, a wood, and bios, life, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects, belonging to the Curculionidæ, or Weevil family.

HYLOPHILUS, hi-lof'e-lus, s. (hyle, a copse, and phileo, I love, Gr.) A genus of birds, belonging to the Paridae, or Titmice: Family, Sylviadæ.

HYLOTOMA, hi-lot'o-ma, s. (hyle, a wood, and temno, I cut, Gr.) A genus of Hymenopterous insects: Family, Securifera.

HYLOZOIC, hi-lo-zo'ik, s. (hyle, matter, and zoe, life, Gr.) One who holds matter to be animated; —a. pertaining to Hylozoism.

HYLOZOISM, hi-lo-zo'izm, s. (hyle, matter, and zoe, life, Gr.) A term used by ancient philosophers to signify the abstract idea of matter and life. In Philosophy, strictly, the doctrine that matter lives.

HYLOZOIST, hi-lo-zo'ist, s. The name of a sect of atheists among the ancient Greek philosophers.

HYLURGUS, hi-lur'gus, s. (hylourgos, a carpenter, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Xylophagi.

HYMEN, hí'men, s. (Greek.) In Grecian Mythology, the god of Marriage, the son of Apollo and Calliope, or of Bacchus and Venus. He is represented as crowned with flowers, particularly with marjoram, having a flame-coloured veil on his head, and a torch in his hand. In Anatomy, a semilunar parabolic, or circular fold of mucous membrane, which partly or wholly closes the entrance of the vagina of woman, and the female of several other mammifera, in the virgin state.

HYMENEA, hi-me-ne'a, s. (Hymen, the god of Marriage, Gr.) A genus of Leguminous trees, with bifoliate leaves and corymbs of whitish or yellowish flowers: Suborder, Cæsalpiniæ.

HYMENANTHES, hi-me-nan'thes, s. (hymen, a membrane, and anthos, a flower, Gr. in reference to the thin corollas.) A genus of plants, natives of Japan: Order, Ericaceæ.

HYMENANTHERA, hi-me-nan-the'ra, s. (hymen, a membrane, and anthera, an anther, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Droseraceæ.

HYMENEAL, hi-me-ne'al, } a. Relating to marriage; —s. a marriage song.

HYMENELLA, hi-me-ne'lla, s. (dim. of hymen, a membrane, Gr. on account of the thin little petaloid crown at the base of the petals.) A genus of plants: Order, Caryophyllaceæ.

HYMENIUM, hi-me-ne-um, s. (Hymen, the god of Marriage, Gr.) In Botany, that part in which the sporules of fungi immediately lie, commonly called the gills.

HYMENOCARPUS, hi-men-o-kár'pus, s. (hymen, a membrane, and karpos, a fruit, Gr. in reference to the membranous legumes.) A genus of Leguminous herbs with yellow flowers: Suborder, Papilionaceæ.

HYMENOCERA, hi-me-nos'e-ra, s. (hymen, a membrane, and keras, a horn, Gr.) A genus of decapod Crustaceans: Family, Macroura.

HYMENOCRATER, hi-men-o-kra'tur, s. (hymen, a membrane, and kroter, a cup, Gr. in allusion to the large membranous calyx.) A genus of plants, natives of Persia: Order, Lamiaceæ.

HYMENODICTYON, hi-men-o-dik'te-un, s. (hymen, a membrane, and dictyon, a net, Gr. in reference to the seeds being girdled by a reticulated membrane.) A genus of trees, natives of the East Indies: Order, Cinchonaceæ.

HYMENOGYNE, hi-me-noj'e-ne, s. (hymen, a membrane, and gynæ, a female, Gr. in allusion to the cohesion of the styles into a membranous tube.) A genus of plants: Order, Mesembryaceæ.

HYMENOLENA, hi-men-o-le'na, s. (hymen, a membrane, and ehlaina, a clock, Gr. in reference to the ribs of the fruit being winged and membranous.) A genus of Umbelliferous plants, belonging to the tribe Smyrnee: Suborder, Campulosperræ.

HYMENOLOGI, hi-me-nol'o-je, s. (hymen, a membrane, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) In Anatomy, a description or a treatise on, and dissection of, the membranes of the animal system.

HYMENOMYCETES, hi-men-o-mis'e-tis, s. (hymen, and mykes, a mushroom, Gr.) An order or tribe of Fungi, characterized by having the spores generally quaternate on distinct sporophores, and the hymenium being naked.

HYMENOPAPPUS, hi-men-o-pap'pus, s. (hymen, a membrane, and pappos, a pappus, Gr. in allusion to the membranous pappus of its seeds.) A genus of Composite plants: Suborder, Tubulifloræ.

HYMENOPHYLLUM, hi-men-o-fil'lam, s. (hymen, a membrane, and phyllon, a leaf, Gr.) The filmy leaf, a genus of Ferns: Order, Polypodiaceæ.

HYMENOPOGON, hi-me-nop'o-gon, s. (hymen, a membrane, and pogon, a beard, Gr. the seeds being furnished with a membranous appendage at each end.) A genus of East Indian plants: Order, Cinchonaceæ.

HYMENOPTERA, hi-me-nop'ter-a, } s. An order
HYMENOPTERANS, hi-me-nop'ter-ans, } of mandibulate insects, comprehending those which have four membranous wings, with few nervures. The tail of the female is usually armed with a sting. Though the insects of this order are included in the mandibulate section, for their mouth is furnished with mandibles and maxillæ, yet they do not generally use them to masticate their food, but for purposes usually connected with their sequence of instincts, as bees in building their cells; the wasps, in scraping particles of wood from posts and rails for a similar purpose, and likewise to seize their prey. But the great instrument by which they collect their food is their tongue: this the bees particularly have the power of inflating, and can wipe both convex and concave surfaces; and with it they lick, but not suck the honey from the blossoms, for Reaumur has proved that this organ acts as a tongue, and not as a pump. Some of the hymenoptera prefer a vegetable diet.

HYMENOPTERAL, hi-me-nop'te-ral, } a. Having HYMENOPTEROUS, hi-me-nop'te-rus, } four membranous wings.

HYMENOSOMA, hi-me-nos'o-ma, s. (hymen, a membrane, and soma, a body, Gr.) A genus of decapodous Crustaceans: Family, Brachyura.

HYMENOSTOMUM, hi-me-nos'to-mum, s. (hymen, a membrane, and stoma, a mouth, Gr. a membrane being stretched over the orifice of the theca.) A genus of minute Moss plants: Order, Bryaceæ.

HYMENOTHALAMIE, hi-men-o-tha-la-me-e, s. (hymen, a membrane, and thalamos, a chamber, Gr.) A tribe of Lichens, in which the shields are open, the nucleus forming a disk and bearing asci.

HYMN, him, s. (hymnus, Lat.) An encomiastic song; a song or ode in honour of God;—v. a. to praise in song; to worship with hymns; to sing; to celebrate in song;—v. n. to sing in praise or adoration.

HYMNIC, him'nik, a. Relating to hymns.

HYMNOLOGIST, him-nol'o-jist, s. A composer of hymns.

HYMNOLOGY, him-nol'o-je, s. (hymnos, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) A collection of hymns.

HYNNIS, hin'nis, s. (Greek, a ploughshare.) A genus of fishes, belonging to the Zeinæ, or Doris: Family, Zeidae.

HYOBANCHE, hi-o-bang'ke, s. (hys hyos, a pig, and agcho, I strangle, Gr.) A genus of herbs, found parasitical on the roots of plants: Order, Onobanchaceæ.

HYODON, hi'o-don, s. (hys, a swine, and odous, a tooth, Gr.) A genus of fishes, belonging to the Clupinæ, or Herrings, in which the body is hering-shaped, the snout short and obtuse, and the mouth set with unequal conic teeth: Family, Salmonidae.

HYO-EPIGLOTTIC, hi-o-ep-e-glot'tik, a. An epithet sometimes employed to designate a band or ligament of condensed cellular tissue, which extends from the posterior part of the body of the hyoid bone to the base of the epiglottis.

HYOGLOSSUS, hi-o-glos'sus, s. (hyo, water, and glossa, the tongue, Gr.) In Anatomy, a term applied to a broad and slender muscle which extends, on each side, from the greater horn, the summit of the body, and the lesser horn and adjacent cartilage of the hyoid bone, to the tongue.

HYOID, hi'oyd, a. (hyo, water, and eidos, likeness, Gr.) An epithet employed to designate an azygous or pairless bone, suspended horizontally between the base of the tongue and the larynx.

HYOSCERIS, hi-os'se-ris, s. (hys hyos, a hog, and seris, a lettuce, Gr.) Swine's-succory, a genus of fetid Composite plants: Suborder, Tubulifloræ.

HYOSCYAMIA, hi-o-si-a'me-a, s. A vegetable alkali, extracted from the plant Henbane, Hyoscyamus niger. It is a strong poison.

HYOSCYAMUS, hi-o-si'a-mus, s. (hys, a pig, and kyamos, a bean, Gr.) Henbane, a genus of plants, consisting of coarse fetid herbs: Order, Solanaceæ.

HYP, hip, s. (contracted from hypochondria.) A disease attended with great melancholy and depression of spirits.

HYPÆTHRAL, hi-pe'thral, a. In Architecture, applied to a temple with ten columns in front and at the back, and two rows of columns entirely round the walls of the building; the centre part, or cell, was open to the air at top.

HYPALLAGE, hip-al'la-je, s. (Greek.) Amongst grammarians, a species of hyerbaton, consisting in a mutual permutation of one case for another.

HYPANTHODIUM, hip-an-tho'de-um, s. (hypo, and anthodes, like flowers, Gr.) In Botany, a form of inflorescence, in which the receptacle is fleshy and covered with minute hairs, but not enclosed in an involucre, as in Dorstenia and Fica.

HYPASPIST, hi-pas'pist, s. A soldier in the armies of Greece, armed in a particular manner.

HYPECOUM, hi-pek'o-um, s. (hypecho, I rattle, Gr. from the noise which the seeds make when shaken in the pod.) A genus of plants with small yellow flowers: Order, Papaveraceæ.

HYPELATE, hip-e-la'te, s. (a name given by Pliny to the plant Ruscus, from hypo, under, and elate, a fir-tree, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Sapindaceæ.

HYPER, hi'pur. A Greek preposition frequently used in composition, where it denotes excess; its literal signification being above or beyond.

HYPERA, hi'per-a, s. (Greek, the name of a kind of caterpillar.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Rhyncophora.

HYPERÆTHESIS, hi-per-e-tho'ses, s. (hyper, beyond, and æthesis, feeling, Gr.) A disease characterized by excessive sensibility, especially of the organs of sense.

HYPERANTHERA.—See Moringa.

HYPERASPIST, hi-per-as'pist, s. (hyperaspistes, from hyper, above, and aspis, a shield, Gr.) A defender.

HYPERBATIC, hi-per-bat'ik, a. Transposed; inverted.

HYPERBATON, hi-per-ba-ton, s. (Greek.) In Grammar, a figurative construction, inverting the proper order of words and sentences. It also means a long retention of the verb which completes the sentence.

HYPERBOLA, hi-per'bo-la, s. (hyper, above, and ballo, I throw, Gr.) In Geometry, a curve formed by cutting a cone in a direction parallel to its axis. Hyperbolic space, the space or content comprehended between the curve of the hyperbola and the whole ordinate.

HYPERBOLE, hi-per'bo-le, s. (hyper, beyond, and ballo, I throw, Gr.) In Rhetoric, a figure by which the reality or truth of things are either exaggerated or depreciated.

HYPERBOLIC, hi-per-bol'ik, } a. Relating to HYPERBOLICAL, hi-per-bol'e-kal, } the hyperbola; having the nature of the hyperbola; relating to or containing a hyperbole; exaggerating or diminishing beyond the fact; exceeding the truth.
Hyperbolic conoid, or hyperboloid, a solid formed by the revolution of a hyperbola about its axis.

HYPERBOLICALLY, hi-per-bol'e-kal-le, ad. In the form of a hyperbola; with exaggeration; in a manner to express more or less than the truth.

HYPERBOLIFORM, hi-per-bol'e-fawrm, a. Resembling a hyperbola.

HYPERBOLISM, hi-per'bo-lizm, s. The use of hyperbole.

HYPERBOLIST, hi-per'bo-list, s. One who uses hyperbole.

HYPERBOLIZE, hi-per'bo-lize, v. n. To speak with exaggeration;—v. a. to exaggerate or extenuate.

HYPERBOREAN, hi-per-bo're-an, s. (hyper, beyond, and boreas, the north wind, Gr.) The name given by the ancients to unknown inhabitants of the most northern regions of the globe, who, as the name implies, were supposed to be placed beyond the influence of the north wind, and consequently to enjoy a mild and delightful climate;
 —a. far north; very cold; frigid.

HYPERCARBURETED, hi-per-kar'bu-ret-ed, a. Supercarbureted; having the largest proportion of carbon.

HYPERCATALECTIC, hi-per-kat-a-lek'tik, a. (hyper, above, and katalektikos, leaving off, Gr.) An epithet applied, in Greek or Latin poetry, to a verse that has one or two syllables too much or beyond the regular measure.

HYPERCHLORIC, hi-per-chor'ik, a. Denoting an acid with a greater proportion of oxygen than the chloric acid.

HYPERCRITIC, hi-per-krit'ik, s. (hyper, above, and kritikos, a critic, Gr.) An over-rigid censor or critic.

HYPERCRITIC, hi-per-krit'ik, } a. Critical HYPERCRITICAL, hi-per-krit'e-kal, } beyond necessity or reason; animadverting on faults with unjust severity; excessively nice or exact; over-critical.

HYPERCRITICISM, hi-per-krit'e-sizm, a. Excessive rigour of criticism.

HYPERCRISIS, hi-per-kri-sis, s. (hyper, and krisis, the crisis of a disease, Gr.) The crisis of a disease; a violent critical effort or evacuation.

HYPERDULIA, hi-per-du'le-a, s. (hyper, above, and dulia, worship or service, Gr.) A term in the Roman Catholic theology, and signifying the worship rendered to the Virgin Mary.

HYPERIA, hi-pe're-a, s. (Hyperion, the sun-god.)
 A genus of Crustaceans: Order, Amphipoda.

HYPERICACEÆ, hi-per-e-ka'se-e, } s. (hypericum, HYPERICINEÆ, hi-per-e-sin'e-e, } one of the genera.) An order of Exogenous plants, usually herbaceous, sometimes shrubs or trees; leaves opposite, without stipules, occasionally alternate; flowers generally yellow, sometimes white or red, regular, with oblique glandular petals, having dark glands on their edges, in number four or five; long distinct styles; stamens hypogæous; seeds naked, numerous and minute.

HYPERICUM, hi-per'e-kum, s. (hyper, above, and

HYPERION—HYPERTROPHY.

eikon, an image, Gr. the superior part of the flower representing a figure.) St. John's-wort, a genus of plants, consisting of herbs or undershrubs:
 Type of the order Hypericaceæ.

HYPERION, hi-pe're-un, s. (Greek.) In Mythology, one of the titles of Helios, the sun; according to Hesiod, the son of Uranos and Gaia, or, according to Homer, the father of Helios by Euryphassa—hence Hyperionides.

HYPERKINESIA, hi-per-ke-ne'zhe-a, s. (hyper, and kinesis, mobility, Gr.) Extreme nervous susceptibility.

HYPERMETER, hi-per'me-tur, s. (hyper, and metron, a measure, Gr.) Anything greater than the ordinary standard of measure.

HYPERMETRICAL, hi-per-met're-kal, a. Exceeding the common measure; having a redundant syllable.

HYPEROCHE, hi-per'o-ke, s. (Greek, pre-eminence.)
 In Music, an interval nearly equal to a comma and a half.

HYPEROODON, hi-per-o'o-don, s. (hyper, above, and odous, a tooth, Gr.) A genus of Cetacea, which has the body and muzzle similar to those of the dolphin; but the cranium is elevated at its edges by vertical bony partitions. There are two small teeth in front of the lower jaw. There is only one species known, which attains a length of from twenty to twenty-five feet, and perhaps more.
 It is sometimes caught in the British channel.

HYPEROSTOSIS, hi-per-os'to-sis, s. (hyper, beyond, and osteon, a bone, Gr.) Used to denote an excessive growth of bone.

HYPEROXIMURIATES, hi-per-oks-e-mu're-ayts, s.
 The old name for the chlorates.

HYPEROXYD, hi-per-ok'sid, a. (hyper, and oxus, sharp, Gr.) Acute to excess, as a crystal.

HYPERPHYSICAL, hi-per-fiz'e-kal, a. Supernatural.

HYPERSARCOMA, hi-per-sar'ko-ma, } s. (hyper, up-HYPERSARCOSIS, hi-per-sar-ko'sis, } on, and sarx, flesh, Gr.) Exuberant growth of granulations on a sore.

HYPERSTHENE, hi-per'sthene, s. (hyper, above, and sthene, strength, Gr. because it possesses greater lustre and hardness than amphibole, with which it was confounded.) Labrador hornblende, the Paulite of Werner, a mineral of a greyish or greenish-black, sometimes of nearly a copper-red colour, and always crystallized in rhombic prisms, having an eminently metallic lustre, on the faces of cleavage. Its constituents are—silica, 51.348; magnesia, 11.092; protoxide of iron, 33.924;
 lime, 1.836; water, 0.500: sp. gr. 3.3. H = 475.

HYPERSTHENIA, hi-per'sthe'ne-a, s. Excess of vital power.

HYPERSTHENIC, hi-per'sthe'nik, a. Containing hypersthene; resembling hypersthene.

HYPERTHYRUM, hi-per'the-rum, s. (hyper, above, and thyra, a door, Gr.) In Architecture, the lintel of a doorway.

HYPERTONIA, hi-per-to'ne-a, s. (hyper, beyond, and tonos, tone, Gr.) Excess of tone in the tissue of the living body.

HYPERTROPHICAL, hi-per-trof'e-kal, a. Producing or tending to produce hypertrophy.

HYPERTROPHY, hi-per'tro-fe, s. A term frequently applied to a morbid enlargement of any part of the body. This term ought to be restricted to

- cases in which a part, though increased in bulk, retains its natural organization and structure.
- HYPERZOODYNAMIA, hi-per-zo-o-di na'me-a, s. (hyper, above, zoos, living, and dynamis, power, Gr.) Excessive augmentation of force in the animal economy.
- HYPILENE, hi-fe'ne, s. (hyphaina, I entwine, Gr. from the nature of the fibres of the fruit.) A genus of East Indian plants: Order, Cyperaceæ.
- HYPHANTUS, hi-fan'tus, s. (hyphantos, woven, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Rhynchophora.
- HYPHEN, hi'fen, s. (Greek.) In Composition, an accent or character, implying that two words are to be joined or connected into one compound word, and marked thus (-), as six-sided. Hyphens also serve to connect the syllables of such words as are divided by the end of the line.
- HYPHOMYCETIS, hi-f-o-mis'e-tis, s. (hyphos, a crown, and mykes, a mushroom, Gr.) An order of Fungi, in which the spores generally quaternate on distinct sporophores, and the hymenium is enclosed in a peridium.
- HYPHOSULPHUROUS ACID, hi-fo-sul'fu-rus as'sid, s. An acid constituted of 2 atoms of sulphur,  $16 \times 2 = 32$ , and 2 of oxygen,  $8 \times 2 = 16$ , its equivalent being 48.
- HYPNOBATISIS, hip-no-bat'e-sis, s. (hypnos, sleep, and batizo, I walk.) Sleep-walking; somnambulism.
- HYPSOLOGICAL, hip-no-laj'e-kal, a. Pertaining to Hypnology.
- HYPSOLOGY, hip-nol'o-je, s. (hypnos, sleep, and logos, a discourse.) The doctrine of sleep.
- HYPNOTICS, hip-not'iks, s. (from hypnos, sleep, Gr.) In the Materia Medica, a medicine tending to produce sleep;—a. pertaining to or inducing sleep.
- HYPNUM, hip'num, s. (hypnon, the name of a moss among the Greeks.) A genus of Moss plants with pinnated bright-green branches, and which form a thick mat-like covering on the surface on which they grow: Order, Bryaceæ.
- HYPO, hi'po. A Greek particle, retained in the composition of different words borrowed from that language, and literally denoting under; beneath.
- HYPOBOLE, hi-poh'o-le, s. (hyper, under, and ballo, I cast, Gr.) In Rhetoric, a figure so named because several things are mentioned which seem to make for the opposite side, and each of them is refuted in order.
- HYPOBOTHUM, hip-o-both'rum, s. (hypo, upon, and bothron, a seat, Gr. the flowers being seated on flat axillary receptacles.) A genus of shrubs, natives of Java: Order, Cinchonaceæ.
- HYPOCALYPTUS, hip-o-ka-lip'tus, s. (hypo, under, and kalypto, I veil, Gr.) A genus of Leguminous plants: Suborder, Papilionaceæ.
- HYPOCATHARSIS, hip-o-ka-thâr'sis, s. (hypo, under, and othaira, I purge, Gr.) A too faint or feeble purgation.
- HYPOCAUSTUM, hip-o-kaws'tum, s. (hypo, under, and kaoio, I burn, Gr.) A subterraneous place where a furnace was kept, used by the Greeks and Romans for heating baths: by the moderns, a place where the fire is kept which warms a stove or hothouse.
- HYPOCHÆRIS, hip-o-ke'ris, s. (hypo, and choiros, a pig, Gr. on account of its roots being eaten with avidity by swine.) Cat's-ear, a genus of Composite plants: Suborder, Tubulifloræ.
- HYPOCHONDRIA, hip-o-kon'dre-a, s. A } s. A HYPOCHONDRIASIS, hip-o-kon-dri'a-sis, } dis-
HYPOCHONDRIASM, hip-o-kon-dri'a-sizm, } ease affecting the hypochondriac region, and accompanied with great lowness of spirits.
- HYPOCHONDRIAC, hip-o-kon'dre-ak, a. In Anatomy, pertaining to the hypochondrium;—s. in Pathology, a person afflicted with hypochondriasis, or morbid affections in the hypochondriacal region.
- HYPOCHONDRIACAL, hip-o-kon-dri'a-kal, a. Same as Hypochondriac.
- HYPOCHONDRIACISM, hip-o-kon-dri'a-sizm, s. A } s. A HYPOCHONDRIASIS, hip-o-kon-dri'a-sis, } disease characterized by languor or debility, depression of spirits or melancholy, with dyspepsy.
- HYPOCHONDRIUM, hip-o-kon'dre-um, s. (hypochondrion, Gr.) In Anatomy, the region situated on each side below the short ribs; the hypochondriac region.
- HYPOCIST, hip'o-sist, s. (hypokistis, Gr.) An inspissated juice obtained from the plant Asarum.
- HYPOCRANIUM, hip-o-kra'ne-um, s. (hypo, under, and kranion, the skull, Gr.) An abscess situated beneath the skull.
- HYPOCRATERIFORM, hip-o-kra-te're-fawrm, a. (hypo, crater, a cup, Gr. and forma, form, Lat.) That form of a corolla which consists in a cylindrical tube which is longer than the flat-spreading limb, as in flowers of the genus Phlox. It is called, in English, salver-shaped.
- HYPOCRISY, he-pok'kre-se, s. (hypocrisie, Fr.) Dissimulation; a feigning to be what one is not; a concealment of one's real character or motives; simulation; deceitful appearance; false pretence.
- HYPOCRITE, hip'o-krit, s. (hypokrites, Gr.) A dissembler in morality or religion; one who feigns to be what he is not; one who assumes a false appearance.
- HYPOCRITIC, hip-o-krit'ik, a. Dissem-HYPOCRITICAL, hip-o-krit'e-kal, } bling; insincere; assuming a false and deceitful appearance; concealing one's real character or motives; proceeding from hypocrisy, or marking hypocrisy.
- HYPOCRITICALLY, hip-o-krit'e-kal-le, ad. With simulation; with a false appearance of what is good; falsely; without sincerity.
- HYPOCYRTA, hip-o-sir'ta, s. (hypo, under, and cyrtos, gibbous, Gr. the under part of the corolla exhibiting a conspicuous gibbosity.) A genus of plants: Order, Gesneriaceæ.
- HYPOELYTRUM, hip-o-el'e-trum, s. (hypo, under, and elytron, a wing-cover, Gr. from the nature of the bracts under the glume.) A genus of plants: Order, Cyperaceæ.
- HYPOESTES, hip-o-es'tis, s. (hypesthes, an inferior garment, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Acanthaceæ.
- HYPOGÆOUS, hip-o-ge'us, s. (hypo, under, and ge, the earth, Gr.) Literally, subterranean. In Botany, it denotes all parts in plants which grow beneath the surface of the earth.
- HYPOGÆUM, hip-o-ge'um, s. (hypo, under, and ge, the ground, Gr.) In ancient Architecture, a name common to all parts of a building under ground, as the cellar, butteries, &c. In Astrology, a name given to the celestial houses below the horizon.

HYPOGASTRIC—HYPOPITYS.

HYPOGASTRIC, hip-o-gas'trik, a. Pertaining to the hypogastrium, or lower belly.

HYPOGASTRORRHEXIS, hip-o-gas-tror-reks'is, s. (hypogastrium, the hypogastrium, and rhexis, rupture, Gr.) Rupture of the belly, with, according to Blanchard and Kraus, laceration of the peritoneum.

HYPOGENE, hip'o-jene, a. (hypo, beneath, and genao, I produce, Gr.) Netherformed, an epithet applied by Mr. Lyell to such rocks as have been formed and consolidated under, and not at the surface of the earth.

HYPOGLOSSIS, hip-o-glos'sis, } s. (glossa, or glotta, Gr.)

HYPOGLOTTIS, hip-o-glot'tis, } the tongue, Gr.) In Anatomy, a name given to two glands of the tongue; applied also to the ninth cerebral nerve, now regarded as the twelfth. In Pathology, an inflammation or ulceration under the tongue: called also ranula.

HYPOGYN, hi-po-jin, s. (hypo, and gynce, a female, Gr.) In Botany, a plant which has its corals and stamens inserted under the pistil.

HYPOGYNOUS, hi-po-j'e-nus, a. Relating to plants that have their corolla and stamens inserted under the pistil.

HYPOLYTRUM, hi-pol'e-trum, s. (hypo, and elytron, an involucre, or wing-cover, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Cyperaceae.

HYPOMOCHILION, hip-o-mo-kil'e-un, s. (hypo, and mochilos, a lever, Gr.) In Mechanics, the support or fulcrum of a lever, or a point against which the pressure is exerted.

HYPONITRITES, hip-o-ni'tritse, s. In Chemistry, a genus of salts, resulting from the combination of hyponitrous acid with salifiable bases. The formula of the acid is  $N + 3O$ , or  $NO_3$ .

HYPONITROUS, hip-o-ni'trus, a. Denoting an acid intermediate between nitric oxide and nitrous acid.

HYPONITROUS ACID, hip-o-ni'trus as'sid, s. An acid intermediate between nitric oxide and nitrous acid, composed of 1 equivalent of nitrogen = 14, and 3 of oxygen = 24, the equivalent of the hyponitrous acid upon the hydrogen scale being 38.

HYPOPHOSPHOROUS ACID, hip-o-fos'fo-rus as'sid, s. An acid composed of 2 atoms of phosphorus and 1 of oxygen; or 32 phosphorus + 8 oxygen.

HYPOPTHALMIA, hip-of-thal'me-a, s. (hypo, under, and ophthalmos, the eye, Gr.) According to Kraus, the pain preceding suppuration, or similar affections, in the anterior chamber of the eye.

HYPOPTHALMUS, hip-of-thal'mus, s. (hypo, under, and ophthalmos, the eye, Gr.) A genus of fishes, in which the body is oval-oblong, the muzzle very much depressed, the eyes remote and lateral, and the first dorsal fin before the lateral: Family, Siluridae.

HYPOPHYLLIUM, hip-o-fil'le-um, s. (hypo, under, and phyllon, a leaf, Gr.) In Botany, a petiole that has the form of a small sheath, is destitute of laminae, and surrounds the base of certain small branches having the appearance of leaves, as in the asparagus; it is nothing but a rudimentary leaf.

HYPOPHYLLOUS, hi-po'il-lus, a. (hypo, under, and phyllon, a leaf, Gr.) In Botany, situated under the leaf.

HYPOPITYS, hip-op'e-tis, s. (hypo, under, and pitys, a pine-tree, Gr. the species being parasitical on the roots of pine-trees.) Yellow-bird's-nest, a genus of plants: Order, Ericaceae.

HYPOPTYPOSIS—HYPOTENUSE.

HYPOPTYPOSIS, hip-op-te-po'sis, s. (Greek.) A figure of speech, which, by a very lively description, represents any person or thing, as it were in a picture set before the eye, or a lively and exact description of any object made by the fancy.

HYPOPYON, hip-op'e-on, s. (hypo, under, and pyon, pus, Gr.) Small abscesses developed between the laminae of the cornea; purulent collections within the chambers of the eye.

HYPOSCENIUM, hip-os se'ne-um, s. (hyposcenion, Gr.) In Antiquity, supposed to have been the front wall or partition of the Greek theatre facing the orchestra.

HYPOSEPETES, hip-o-sep'e-tes, s. (hypo, under, Gr. and sepes, a hedge, Lat.?) A genus of birds, belonging to the Brachypodinae, or Short-footed Thrushes, distinguished from the other genera by the tail being forked: Family, Merulidae.

HYPOSPADIA, hip-o-spa'de-a, s. (hypospao, I draw from beneath, Gr.) A congenital malformation, wherein the orifice of the urethra terminates on the inferior surface of the penis.

HYPOSPHAGMA, hip-os-fag'ma, s. (Greek.) Extravasation of blood beneath the conjunctiva oculi.

HYPOSTAPHYLITIS, hip-os-taf'e-li'tis, s. (hypo, and staphyle, the uvula, Gr.) Slight inflammation of the uvula.

HYPOSTASIS, hip-os'ta-sis, s. (Greek.) Sediment in the urine.

HYPOSTASY, hip-os'ta-se, } Used by the Greek fathers to express the distinct personality of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

HYPOSTATIC, hip-o-stat'ik, } a. Relating to HYPOSTATICAL, hip-o-stat'e-kal, } hypostasis; constitutive; personal, or distinctly personal, or constituting a distinct substance.

HYPOSTATICALLY, hip-o-stat'e-kal-le, ad. Personally.

HYPOSTERNAL, hip-o-ster'nal, a. (hypo, under, and sternon, the breast, Gr.) A term applied to the lower piece or division of the sternum.

HYPOSTOMA, hip-os'to-ma, s. (hypo, under, and stoma, the mouth, Gr.) A genus of fishes: Family, Siluridae.

HYPOSTROPHY, hip-os'tro-fe, s. (hypostrophe, Gr.)

A return or going back; the relapse of a disease.

HYPOSTYLE, hip'o-stile, s. (hypostulos, Gr.) That which is supported by pillars.

HYPOSULPHO-BENZOATES, hip-o-sul'fo-ben-zo'-ayts, s. A genus of salts formed by the combination of hyposulpho-benzoic acid with salifiable bases, which acid is obtained in a colourless crystalline mass, having a strong acid taste. The formula of this acid is  $C_{14} H_4 O_3 + S_2 O_3 + 2 aq$ .

HYPOSULPHURIC ACID, hip-o-sul-fu'rik as'sid, s. An acid intermediate between the sulphurous and sulphuric acids; it may be regarded as containing 2 atoms of sulphur,  $16 \times 2 = 32$ , and 5 of oxygen,  $8 \times 5 = 40$ ; or, as constituted of 1 atom of sulphurous acid = 32, and 1 of sulphuric acid = 40; in either case its equivalent is = 72.

HYPOSULPHUROUS, hip-o-sul-fu-rus, a. Hyposulphurous acid is an acid containing less oxygen than sulphurous acid.

HYPOTENUSE, hip-of'e-nuse, s. (hypo, and teino, I stretch, Gr.) In Geometry, the subtense or longest side of a right-angled triangle, or the line that subtends the right angle.

HYPOTHECATE—HYPYSTARIUM.

HYPOTHECATE, hip-oth'e-kate, v. a. (from hypotheca, a pledge, Lat.) To pawn; to give in pledge.

HYPOTHECATION, hip-oth'e-ka'shun, s. The act of pledging.

HYPOTHECATOR, hip-oth'e-kay-tur, s. One who pledges a ship or other property, as security for the repayment of money borrowed.

HYPOTHENAR, hip-o-then'ar, s. (Greek.) In Anatomy, a projection formed on the lower or pulmo surface of the hand by four muscles, Pulmaris brevis abductor.

HYPOTHESIS, hip-oth'e-sis, s. (Greek.) A proposition or principle which we suppose or take for granted, in order to draw conclusions for the proof of a point in question. In Mathematics, a proposition or principle taken for granted, in order to draw conclusions therefrom for the proof of a point in question. Any principle supposed or taken for granted, for the solution of any phenomena in natural philosophy, is also called a hypothesis.

HYPOTHETIC, hip-o-thet'ik, } a. Including a HYPOTHETICAL, hip-o-thet'e-kal, } supposition; conditional; assumed without proof for the purpose of reasoning and deducing proof.

HYPOTHETICALLY, hip-o-thet'e-kal-le, ad. By way of supposition.

HYPOTHIC, hip-oth'ik, } s. Literally, the sub-

HYPOTHICA, hip-oth'e-ka, } section of a thing to the authority of another person, is a term derived from the civil law, still in use in the law of Scotland, and in that of France with the lingual variation of hypothique; while, though in the law of England it is not a received technical expression, it is occasionally used for describing any species of security, holding the character which the word was employed by civilians to represent.

HYPOTRACHELIUM, hip-o-tra-ke'le-um, s. (hypot, and trachelos, the neck, Gr.) In Architecture, being the slenderest part of the shaft of a column, being that immediately below the neck of the capital.

HYPOTYPOSIS, hip-o-te-po'sis, s. (Greek, a general description or sketch.) In Rhetoric, an animated representation of a scene or event in descriptive language, highly enriched with rhetorical figures.

HYPOXIDACEÆ, hip-oks-e-da'se-e, } s. (hypoxia, genera.) An order of Narcissal Endogens, consisting of herbaceous plants, with hexapetalous flowers, which are much imbricated, and have six stamens with anthers turned inwards.

HYPOXIS, hip-ok'sis, s. (hypot, under, and oxys, pointed, Gr. in allusion to the sharp points of the inferior sepals.) A genus of plants, type of the natural order Hypoxadaceæ.

HYPYZOMA, hip-o-zo'ma, s. (hypot, under, and soma, a mouth, Gr.) A membranous partition; as the mediastinum and diaphragm.

HYPOLITE, hip'po-lite, s. (hypot, and polites, a citizen, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Sericornes.

HYPSPRIMNUS, hip-se-prim'nus, s. (hypsiprimos, with a high stern, Gr.) The Potoo-roo, or Kangaroo rat, a genus of Marsupial animals, natives of Australia.

HYPYSTARIUM, hip-sis-ta're-i, s. (hysistos, highest, Gr.) A sect in the fourth century, so called from the profession they made of worshipping the Most High God; they also revered fire and lamps with the heathens, and observed the Sabbath, and the distinction of clean and unclean things with the Jews.

HYPSONETRY—HYSTEROPHYSIS.

HYPSONETRY, hip-som'e-tre, s. (hypot, height, and metreo, I measure, Gr.) The art of measuring the relative or absolute height of places upon the surface of the earth, either by the barometer, or by trigonometrical observations.

HYPTIS, hip'tes, s. (hiptis, resupinate, Gr. the limb of the corolla being turned on its back.) A genus of plants: Order, Lamiaceæ.

HYPUDEUS, hi-pu-de'us, s. The Camp-mice, a genus of Rodents, placed by Cuvier between Myoxus and Mus.

HYRAX, hi'rax, s. (hyrax, mixed, Gr.) The Rock-rabbit, a small rabbit-like animal, classed by Cuvier in the same division with the rhinoceros. The muzzle and ears are very short, and covered with fur; the tail is wanting, or has only a small tubercle in its place.

HYREUS, hi're-us, s. (meaning unknown to us.) A genus of birds, belonging to the Phitotominæ, or Plant-cutters: Family, Musophagidæ.

HYRIA, hi're-a, s. A genus of Mollusca, the bivalve shell of which has the hinge margin straight, both extremities elevated and winged; cardinal teeth very long, and resembling lateral teeth: Family, Unionidæ.

HYRIANÆ, hi-ri'a-ne, s. A subfamily of the Unionidæ, characterized by having the bosses of the shells longitudinally sulcated; cardinal teeth long, compressed, and placed on one side of the bosses; hinge margin winged.

HYRIDELLA, hi-re-del'la, s. (dim. of hyria.) A genus of Mollusca, the shell of which is transversely oval; the bosses not sulcated; the posterior margin elevated and winged, and having one cardinal tooth in each fin: Family, Unionidæ.

HYSON, hi'sun, s. A species of green tea from China.

HYSSOP.—See Hyssopus.

HYSSOPUS, his-so'pus, s. (hyssopos, Gr.) Hyssop, a genus of strongly aromatic herbs, with a warm pungent taste: Order, Lamiaceæ.

HYSTERALAGY, his-ter-al'a-je, s. (hystera, the womb, and algos, pain, Gr.) Pain in the womb.

HYSTERIA, his-te're-a, s. (hystera, the womb.) A morbid affection peculiar to the human female, and resulting from cerebral and spinal, combined with uterine, irritation.

HYSTERIC, his-ter'ik, } a. (hysterique, Fr.)

HYSTERICAL, his-ter'e-kal, } Disordered in the region of the womb; troubled with fits or nervous affections.

HYSTERIUM, his-te're-um, s. (hysteresis, penury, Gr. from the poverty-struck-like appearance of the trees upon which it is parasitical.) A genus of Fungi: Order, or Tribe, Gasteromycetes.

HYSTEROLITHIASIS, his-ter-o-le-thi'a-sis, s. (hystera, the womb, and lithiasis, the formation of the stone, Gr.) Formation of a stone, or stone-like concretion, within the uterus.

HYSTEROLOXIA, his-ter-o-lok'ec-a, s. (hystera, the womb, and loxos, oblique, Gr.) Obliquity of the uterus.

HYSTEROMANIA.—See Nymphomania.

HYSTERON PROTERON, his-ter-on pro'te-ron, s. (Greek words signifying following and before.) In Grammar and Rhetoric, a species of the hyperbaton, in which the proper order of construction is so inverted, that the part of any sentence which should be first comes last.

HYSTEROPHYSIS, his-te-rof'e-sis, } s. (hystera, and physena, inflation, Gr.) Distension of the womb with a gaseous fluid.
HYSTEROPHESMA, his-te-ro-fe-se'ma, } the womb,

HYSTEROPTOSIS—HYSTEROSTOMATOMUS.

HYSTEROPTOSIS, his-ter-op-to'sis, s. (hystera, the womb, and optosis, a falling down, Gr.) A falling down of the womb; prolapsus uteri.

HYSTERORRHEA, his-ter-or-re'a, s. (hystera, the womb, and rheo, I flow, Gr.) A discharge of blood, pus, or mucus from the womb.

HYSTEROSCOPE, his-ter-o-scope, s. (hystera, the womb, and skopeo, I examine, Gr.) An instrument whereby a view of the os uteri in the living subject may be obtained.

HYSTEROSOPHIA, his-ter-o-sof'e-a, s. (hystera, the womb, and spophos, a noise, Gr.) Discharge of air from the uterus.

HYSTEROTOMUS—HYSTRIX.

Contouly for division of the mouth, or rather neck, of the uterus, employed in performing the operation of hysterotomy.

HYSTEROTOMUS, his-ter-ot'o-mus, s. (hystera, the womb, and tome, incision, Gr.) An instrument employed in performing the operation of hysterotomy.

HYSTEROTOMY, his-ter-ot'o-me, s. Incision of the womb.

HYSTRICIDÆ, his-tris'e-de, s. (hystrix, one of the genera.) A name given by Gray to a family of Mammiferous animals, of which the Porcupine, or genus Hystrix, is the type.

HYSTRIX, his'triks, s. (Greek, from hys, a pig, and thrix, a bristle.) The Porcupine, a genus of Rodents, the bodies of which are armed with rigid sharp spines, sometimes intermediate with hair.

I.

I—IANTHINA.

I is the ninth letter and the third vowel of the English alphabet. In French, and in most European languages, i has the long name sound which we express by e in me, or ee in seen, meek; this sound is still retained in some foreign words which are naturalized in our language, as in machine, intrigue. In most English words, however, this long sound is shortened, as in holiness, pity, gift, in which words the sound of i is the same as that of y in hypocrite. The sound of i long, as in find, kind, arise, is diphthongal. This letter enters into several digraphs, as in fail, field, seize, feign, vein, friend; and with o, in oil, join, coin, it helps to form a proper diphthong. No English word ends with i; but when the sound occurs at the end of a word, it is expressed by y. I, as a numeral, signifies one, and stands for as many units as it is repeated in times; as, II two, III three, &c. When it stands before V or X it subtracts itself, and the numerals denote one less than the V or the X: but when placed after V or X, it denotes the addition of a unit, or as many units as the letter is repeated in times.

I, i, (ic, Sax. ik, Goth. and Dut. ego, Gr. and Lat.) The pronoun of the first person myself. It is only the nominative case of the pronoun; in the other cases we use me, as 'I am attached to study, study delights me;' in the plural we use we and us, words which appear to be radically distinct from I.

IACCHUS.—See Bacchus.

IAMBIC, i-am'bik, a. (iambique, Fr. iambicus, Lat.) Relating to the iambus, a poetic foot.

IAMBIC, i-am'bik, } s. (iambus, Lat. iambos, Gr.)

IAMBUS, i-am'bus, } In Poetry, a foot consisting of two syllables, the first short and the last long, as in delight.

IAMBICS, i-am'biks, s. pl. Verses composed of short and long syllables alternately. Anciently, certain songs or satires, supposed to have given birth to ancient comedy.

IANTHINA, i-an'the-na, s. (ianthinos, violet-coloured, Gr.) A genus of Mollusca, allied to Scissurella, both of which are characterized by having the aperture of the shell very effuse, and the outer lip sinuated: Family, Trochidae.

IATHROPHIC ACID, i-a-throf'ik as'sid, s. A name which has been given to the acrid principle of croton oil.

IATROLEPT, i'at-ro-lept, s. (iätros, a physician, and aleipho, I anoint, Gr.) One who cures by anointing.

IATROLEPTIC, i-a-tro-lep'tik, a. Effecting a cure by anointing, friction, and exercise.

IBALIA, i ba-le-a, s. (meaning not given.) A genus of Hymenopterous insects: Family, Pupivora.

IBERIS, i-be'ris, s. (Iberia, the ancient name of Spain.) Candy-tuft, a genus of Cruciferous plants, consisting of herbs or subshrubs, with white or purplish flowers; Suborder, Plenorrhizen.

IBEX, i'beks, s. The Caprabex, a species of goat, with large horns, square in front, and marked with transverse and prominent knots.

IBIDEM, ib'e-dem, ad. (Latin.) In the same place.

IBIS, i'bis, s. (Greek.) A genus of Wading-birds, with a long slender bill, cylindrical and arched at the base, and long ample broad wings. The Ibis was the sacred bird of Egyptian superstition, and had divine honours paid to it: Family, Tantalidae.

IBYCTER, i-bik'tur, s. (ibyceter, a trumpeter, Gr.) A genus of birds, belonging to the Cymindinae, or Kites, natives of America: Family, Falconidae.

IC, ik. In Chemistry, a particle, used as a termination of the names of those acids which contain, in combination, the highest known quantity of the acidifying principle.

ICACO, i-ka'ko, s. The name given in South America and the West Indies to the Cocoa-plum, or fruit of the plant Chrysobalanus icaco.

ICANATES, ik-ka-na'tes, s. A name given to the soldiers posted round the outside gates of the Grand Seigneur.

ICARIAN, i-ka're-an, a. (from Icarus.) Adventurous in flight; soaring too high for safety, like Icarus.

ICASINA, ik-a-si'na, s. (the name given to it from its resemblance to the plant Chrysobalanus icaco.) A genus of plants: Order, Olacaceæ.

ICE, ise, s. (is, or iso, Sax.) A solid, transparent, and brittle body, formed of some fluid, particularly water, and caused by the reduction of the temperature: water becomes solid at 32 degrees Fahrenheit;—concreted sugar; to break the ice, is to make the first opening to any attempt;—v. a. to cover with ice; to convert into ice; to cover with concreted sugar; to frost; to chill; to freeze. Ice-blink, a name given by the pilots to a bright appearance near the horizon, occasioned by the ice, and observed before the ice itself is seen. Ice-plant, the plant Mesembryanthemum crystallinum. Ice-saw, a large saw, used for cutting through the ice, to relieve ships when frozen up.

ICEBERGS, ise'bergs, s. (ice, and berg, a mountain, Germ.) Vast bodies of ice filling the valleys between the high mountains in the northern latitudes. Among the most remarkable are those of the coast of Spitzbergen. Icebergs are the creation of ages, and receive annually additional height by the falling of snows and of rain, which often instantly freezes, and more than repairs the loss occasioned by the influence of the sun.

ICEBIRD, ise'bird, s. A bird of Greenland.

ICEBOAT, ise'bote, s. A boat constructed for moving on ice; a strong boat for breaking a passage through ice.

ICEBOUND, ise'bownd, a. In Nautical language, completely surrounded with ice, so as to be incapable of advancing.

ICEBUILT, ise'bilt, a. Composed of ice; loaded with ice.

ICEGLAZED, ise'glayzd, a. Incrusted or glazed with ice.

ICEHOUSE, ise'how's, s. A place for the preservation of ice during warm weather.

ICE ISLAND, ise'land, s. A name given by sailors to a great quantity of ice collected into one huge solid mass, and floating about upon the seas near or within the polar circles.

ICE ISLE, ise'ile, s. A vast body of floating ice.

ICELANDER, ise'lan-dur, s. A native of Iceland.

ICELANDIC, ise'lan-dik, a. Pertaining to Iceland;—s. the language of the Icelanders.

ICELAND MOSS, ise'land mos, s. The plant Cetraria islandica.

ICELAND SPAR, ise'land spår, s. An exceedingly pure variety of calcareous spar or carbonate of lime, remarkable for its clearness, and the beautiful double refraction which it exhibits.

ICE SPAR, ise'spår, s. A mineral found at Monte Somma, near Naples, of a greyish-white colour; often massive, inclining sometimes to greyish-white, and sometimes crystalized in thin, longish, six-sided tables. It consists of silica, 63.56; alumina, 24.06; potash, 10.03; lime, 0.94; peroxide of iron, 0.92; water, 0.37; a trace of manganese: sp. gr. 4.32. H=3.

ICHNEUMON, ik-nu'mon, s. (Greek.) Pharaoh's Rat. In Mammalogy, the name given to a quadruped of the Viverrine family, the Herpestes of modern zoologists, distinguished as a destroyer of the eggs of the crocodile, and as such, one of the sacred animals of the Egyptians. In Entomology, a genus of Hymenopterous insects, type of the family Ichneumonidae. These insects destroy the posterity of the Lepidoptera in the caterpillar state, as the weasel, so called, is said to destroy that of the crocodile by breaking its eggs, and even by introducing itself into the body of the animal, in order to devour its entrails.—Cuvier.

ICHNEUMONES, ik-nu-mo'nes, s. A tribe of parasitical Hymenopterous insects, distinguished by the confluence of the second discoidal and first submarginal cells of the superior wings, and where there is an intervening submarginal cell, by that being very small.

ICHNEUMONIDÆ, ik-nu-mon'e-de, s. (ichneumon, one of the genera.) A genus of Hymenopterous insects, which have the body elongate, ovate, and depressed, with the ovipositor, which supplants the sting, not or scarcely exerted.

ICHNEUMONIDAN, ik-nu-mon'e-dan, a. Relating to the Ichneumonides.

ICHNOCARPUS, ik-no-kår'pus, s. (ichnos, a trace, and karpos, a seed, Gr. in reference to the slender follicles.) A genus of plants, consisting of climbing shrubs, with white inodorous flowers: Order, Apocynaceæ.

ICHOGRAPHIC, ik-no-graf'ik, } a. (ichnos, }
ICHOGRAPHICAL, ik-no-graf'e-kal, } and gra- pho, I write, Gr.) Pertaining to ichnography; describing a ground plot.

ICHOGRAPHY, ik-nog'ra-fe, s. In Perspective, the view of anything cut off by a plane parallel to the horizon, just at the base of it. Among painters, it is used to describe images or ancient statues of marble and copper, of busts and semibusts, of paintings in fresco, mosaic works, and ancient pieces of miniature. In Architecture, a transverse or horizontal section of a building, exhibiting the plot of the whole edifice, and of the several apartments in any story.

ICHOR, ik'or, s. (Greek.) A thin and sanious fluid, which, escaping from wounds or sores, irritates or inflames the parts over which it flows.

ICHOROUS, ik'o-rus, a. Like ichor; thin; watery; serous.

ICHTHYCALLUS, ik-the-kal'lus, s. (ichthys, a fish, and kallos, beauty, Gr.) A genus of fishes: Family, Chætodonidae.

ICHTHYITES, ik'the-itse, s. A stone, having a cavity in it resembling a fish.—Not used.

ICHTHYOCOLLA, ik-the-o-kol'la, s. (ichthys, and kollos, glue, Gr.) Isinglass, a preparation from the fish known by the name of Huso. A very pure form of gelatine, prepared from certain parts of the entrails of several fish. Good isinglass should be free from smell or taste, and perfectly soluble in boiling water.

ICHTHYOGRAPHY, ik-the-og'ra-fe, s. (ichthys, and grapho, I describe, Gr.) A treatise on fishes.

ICHTHYOLITE, ik'the-o-lite, s. (ichthys, a fish, and lithos, a stone, Gr.) A stone containing the petrification of a fish or any of its parts.

ICHTHYOLOGICAL, ik-the-o-loj'e-kal, a. (ichthys, and logos, a treatise, Gr.) Relating to ichthyology.

ICHTHYOLOGIST, ik-the-ol'o-jist, s. One versed in ichthyology.

ICHTHYOLOGY, ik-the-ol'o-je, s. (ichthys, a fish, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) That department of Natural History which treats of the structure, habits, and classification of fishes.

ICHTHYOMANCY, ik-the-om'an-se, s. (ichthys, a fish, and manteia, divination, Gr.) A species of divination by the examination of the entrails of fishes.

ICHTHYOPHAGIST, ik-the-ol'a-jist, s. (ichthys, and phago, I eat, Gr.) One who eats fish, or subsists on fish.

ICHTHYOPHAGOUS, ik-the-of'a-gus, a. Eating or subsisting on fish.

ICHTHYOPHAGY, ik-the-of'a-je, s. The state or practice of feeding upon fish.

ICHTHYOPHIS, ik-the-o-fis, s. (ichthys, a fish, and ophis, a serpent, Gr.) A genus of fishes of the Eel kind, the body of which is cylindrical, spiracles lateral, one on each side of the head; mouth rather large; teeth acute; no fins whatever: Family, Murinidae.

ICHTHYOSCORUS, ik-the-os'ko-pus, s. (ichthys, a fish, and skopaios, a dwarf, Gr.) A genus of fishes, the head and body of which are nearly cylindrical; the dorsal fin single, long, and generally composed of soft, simple rays; mouth often furnished with cirri; scales minute, or none.

ICHTHYOSIS, ik-the-o'sis, s. (ichthys, a fish, Gr. from its resemblance to a fish's skin.) A roughness and thickening of the skin, portions of which become scaly, and occasionally corneous, with a tendency to excrescences.

ICHTHYOTOMY, ik-the-ot'o-me, s. The anatomy or dissection of fishes.

ICICA, i-se'ka, s. (the name of one of the species in Guiana.) A genus of plants, with racemes of white flowers: Order, Burseraceae.

ICICLE, i-se-kl, s. (ies, geel, Sax.) A pendant conical mass of ice, formed by the freezing of water or other fluid, as it flows down an inclined plane, or collects in drops and is suspended. In Heraldry, a bearing in an escutcheon, which is otherwise termed a gutter.

ICINESS, i-se-nes, s. The state of being icy, or of being very cold; the state of generating ice.

ICINI, i-se-ni, s. The ancient name given to the people of Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridgeshire, and Huntingdonshire.

ICON, i'kon, s. (eikon, an image, Gr.) An image or representation.—Obsolete.

Boysardus, in his tract of divination, hath set forth the icons of these ten, yet added two others.—Brown.

ICONISM, ik'o-niz-m, s. (eikonismos, Gr.) In Rhetoric, a figure of speech which consists in representing a thing to the life.

ICONOCLASM, i-kon'o-klaz-m, s. The act of breaking or destroying images.

ICONOCLASTIC, i-kon-o-klas'tik, a. Pertaining to the breaking of images.

Most of those (statues) at York were destroyed in the first emotions of iconoclastic zeal.—Steuart.

ICONOCLASTS, i-kon'o-klasts, s. In History, a title applied to two of the Byzantine emperors, Leo the Isaurian, and his son Constantine Capronymus, who reigned from 726 to 795.

ICONOGRAPHY, i-ko-nog'ra-fe, s. (eikon, and grapho, I write, Gr.) A description of statues and similar monuments of ancient art.

ICONOLATER, i-ko-nol'a-tur, s. (eikon, and latris, a slave, Gr.) A worshipper of images.

ICONOLOGY, i-ko-nol'o-je, s. (eikon, and logos, a treatise, Gr.) The doctrine of images or representations.

ICOSAHEDRAL, i-ko-sa-he'dral, a. (eikosi, twenty, and hedra, a side, Gr.) Having twenty equal sides.

ICOSAHEDRON, i-ko-sa-he'dron, s. In Geometry, a regular solid, consisting of twenty triangular pyramids, whose vertices meet in the centre of a sphere, which is supposed to surround it, and therefore have their height and bases equal.

ICOSANDRIA, i-ko-san'dre-a, s. (eikosi, twenty, and aner, a male, Gr.) The twelfth Linnæan class, comprising such plants as have twenty or more stamens, perigynous, or inserted into the calyx.

ICOSANDRIAN, i-ko-san'dre-an, } a. Relating to ICOSANDROUS, i-ko-san'drus, } the class of plants Icosandria.

ICTERIA, ik-te're-a, s. (ikteros, the jaundice, Gr. also the name of a bird of a yellowish-green colour, by looking at which any jaundiced person was said to be cured.) A genus of birds, belonging to the Brachipodine, or short-footed Thrushes: Family, Merulidae.

ICTERIC, ik-ter-ik, } a. (ictericus, Lat.) Af-ICTERICAL, ik-ter-e-kal, } fected with the jaundice; good in the cure of the jaundice.

ICTERIC, ik-ter-ik, a. A remedy for the jaundice.

ICY-PEARLED, i-se-perid, a. Studded with spangles of ice.

So mounting up in icy-pearled car,
Through middle empire of the freezing air
He wandered long.—Milton.

IDE, ide, s. In Chemistry, a termination for certain compounds which are not acid; as oxides, chlorides, &c.

IDEA, i-de'a, s. (Latin.) That which the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought, or understanding. In a popular sense, the term signifies notion, conception, thought, opinion, and even purpose or intention: an opinion; a proposition. The term, in its most comprehensive and now generally received acceptation, is used to indicate every representation of outward objects through the senses, and whatever is the immediate object of thought. In the Platonic philosophy, the word idea possessed a higher import, and was used primarily to denote the archetypes of all created things, as they subsist in the divine intellect; and secondarily, the conceptions of the human understanding, by means of which the essence of a thing is conceived.

IDEAL, i-de'al, a. Existing in idea; intellectual; mental; visionary; that considers ideas as images, phantasms, or forms in the mind. This term has two meanings, philosophical and critical. In the former, it signifies whatever belongs or relates to ideas generally. It is in this sense that the word is employed in the phrase 'ideal theory,' in the controversy between Reid and Priestley. The second sense of the word is more limited, being confined to a peculiar class of ideas created by and solely existing in the imagination.

IDEALESS, i-de'a-less, a. Destitute of ideas.

IDEALISM, i-de'al-izm, s. The system or theory that makes everything to consist in ideas, and denies the existence of material bodies; also, the designation of many and different systems of philosophy, which only agree in the common principle from which they originate. This principle is the opposite of the ideal and the real, that is, of ideas and things; the contrariety of mind and body, or of spirit and matter.

IDEALIST, i-de'al-ist, s. One who holds the doctrine of idealism.

IDEALIZE, i-de'al-ize, v. n. To form ideas.

IDEALLY, i-de'al-le, ad. Intellectually; mentally; in idea.

IDEATE, i-de'ate, v. a. To fancy; to form in idea.—Obsolete.

What good statesmen would they be, who should ideate or fancy such a commonwealth!—Knott.

IDEM, i'dem, a. (Latin.) The same.

IDENTIC, i-den'tik, } a. (identique, Fr.) The IDENTICAL, i-den'te-kal, } same; implying the same thing; comprising the same idea.

IDENTICALLY, i-den'te-kal-le, ad. With sameness.

IDENTICALNESS, i-den'te-kal-nes, s. Sameness.

IDENTIFICATION, i-den-te-fe-ka'shun, s. The act of making or proving to be the same.

IDENTIFY, i-den'te-fi, v. a. (idem, and facio, I make, Lat.) To ascertain or prove to be the same; to make to be the same; to combine or unite in such a manner as to make one interest, purpose, or intention; to consider as the same in effect;—v. n. to become the same; to coalesce in interest, purpose, use, effect, &c.

IDENTITY, i-den'te-te, s. Sameness, as distinguished from similitude and diversity. In philosophical language, the sameness of a substance under every possible variety of circumstances. In this sense it is employed in the phrase personal identity, where it signifies the invariable sameness of the thinking subject, or ego. In a secondary sense, it denotes a merely relative identity, which may also be called logical or abstract.

IDEOGRAPHIC, i-de-o-graf'ik, a. (idea, and grapho, I write, Gr.) Descriptive of ideas. Ideographic characters, in Philology, characters which express figures or notions.

IDEOLOGICAL, i-de-o-loj'e-kal, a. Relating to ideology.

IDEOLOGIST, i-de-o-l'o-jist, s. One who treats of ideas.

IDEOLOGY, i-de-o'l'o-je, s. (idea, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) A treatise on ideas. The science of ideas or mind, is the term by which the later disciples of Condillac, under the Directory and the Empire, have designated the history and evolution of human ideas, considered as so many successive modes of certain original or transformed sensations.

IDES, idze, s. pl. (idus, Lat.) In the ancient Roman calendar, eight days in each month: the first day of which fell on the 13th of January, February, April, June, August, September, November, and December. and on the 15th of March, May, July, and October.

IDIA, e-di'a, s. (idios, peculiar, Gr.) A genus of Dipterous insects; Family, Mecidae.

IDIOCRATIC, id-e-o-krat'ik, } a. Peculiar in IDIOCRITICAL, id-e-o-krat'e-kal, } constitution.

IDIOCY, id'e-o-se, s. (idiotes, an unlearned man, Gr.) Want or defect of understanding; a natural defect.

IDIOELECTRIC, id-e-o-e-lek'trik, a. (idios, Gr. and electric.) Electric per se, or containing electricity in its natural state.

IDIOM, id'e-um, s. (idione, Fr.) A mode of speaking peculiar to a language or dialect; peculiarity of expression or phraseology.

Some that with care true eloquence shall teach,
And to just idions fix our doubtful speech.—Prior.

In Philology, a mode of speaking or writing, foreign from the usage of universal grammar, or the general laws of language, and restricted to the genius of some individual tongue. Thus, a sentence or phrase, consisting of words arranged in a particular manner, may be a Latin idiom, &c.; the same, arranged in a different manner, an English idiom, &c. The use of a particular inflexion of a word may also be an idiom. We have a number of subordinate words to express the idioms of particular tongues; thus, a Latin idiom is a Latinism; a French idiom a Gallicism, &c.

IDIOMATIC, id-e-o-mat'ik, } a. Peculiar to

IDIOMATICAL, id-e-o-mat'e-kal, } a language or

IDIOMATICALLY, id-e-o-mat'e-kal-le, ad. Accord-

IDIOPATHIC, id-e-o-path'ik, a. (idios, peculiar, and pathos, a disease, Gr.) Relating to idiopathy; indicating a disease peculiar to a particular part of the body, and not arising from any preceding distemper.

IDIOPATHICALLY, id-e-o-path'e-kal-le, ad. Resulting from its own disease or affections; not sympathetically.

IDIOPATHY, id-e-op'a-the, s. (idiopathia, Gr.) A primary disease, neither consequent on, nor complicated with, other morbid affections.

IDIORPULSIVE, id-e-o-re-pul'siv, a. Repulsive by itself.

IDIOSYNCRASY, id-e-o-sin'kra-se, s. (idios, peculiar, in, with, and krasis, a mingling, Gr.) A peculiarity of temperament or constitution, which predisposes persons to the attacks of certain disorders, from which others are exempt.

IDIOSYNCRITICAL, id-e-o-sin-krat'e-kal, a. Of peculiar habit or disposition.

IDIOT, id'e-ut, s. (idiota, Lat.) A natural fool, or fool from his birth; a foolish person; one with an impaired intellect, or destitute of understanding. Inquirendo de idiota, in Law, a writ or commission to inquire into the state of a person's mind.

IDIOTCY, id'e-ut-se, s. State of being an idiot.

IDIOTIC, id-e-ot'ik, } a. Like an idiot; par-

IDIOTICAL, id-e-ot'e-kal, } taking of idiocy; sot-

IDIOTISH, id-e-ot'ish, } tish; foolish.

IDIOTICON, id-e-ot'e-kon, s. A dictionary of words in one dialect, or of one tract of country.

IDIOTISM, id'e-ut-izm, s. Peculiarity of expression; a mode of expression peculiar to a language; a peculiarity in the structure of words and phrases; folly; natural imbecility of mind.

IDIOTIZE, id'e-ut-ize, v. n. To become stupid.—Seldom used.

It looks as if the heads of the greatest men were idiotized when they meet together.—Persian Letters.

IDLE, i'dl, a. (idel, ydel, Sax.) Not employed; averse to labour; not engaged; affording leisure; not employed; useless; vain; ineffectual; remaining unused; vacant; not occupied; unfruitful; barren; not productive of good; trifling; of no importance, as 'an idle story'; not tending to edification; lazy. This term is not synonymous with lazy, or a constitutional dislike or aversion to labour or action; idle, in its legitimate meaning, signifies unemployed, as an industrious man may be idle, but he cannot be lazy;—v. a. to lose or spend time in inaction, or without being employed in business;—v. a. to waste idly; to consume unprofitably.

If you have but an hour, will you improve that hour instead of idling it away?—Lord Chesterfield.

IDLEHEADED, i'dl-hed-ed, a. Foolish; unreasonable; delirious; infatuated.—Seldom used in the last two senses.

IDLENESS, i'dl-nes, s. Absence of employment; the state of a person who is unemployed or doing nothing; aversion or reluctance to labour, or be employed either with mind or body; laziness; slothfulness; sluggishness; trivialness; inefficacy; uselessness; barrenness; worthlessness; unreasonable; foolishness; madness.—Seldom used in the last eight senses.

There is no heat of affection but is joined with some idleness of brain.—Bacon.

IDLEPATED, i'dl-pay-ted, a. Idleheaded; stupid.

IDLER, i'dl-ur, s. One who spends his time in inaction, or without being engaged in business; a lazy person; a sluggard.

IDLESBY, i'dlz-be, s. An inactive or lazy person.

IDLY, i'dl-e, ad. Lazily; without employment; foolishly; in a trifling manner; carelessly; without attention; vainly; ineffectually.

IDOCRASE, id'o-kras, s. (eido, I see, and krasis, mixture, Gr.) A volcanic mineral of various shades of brown, passing into various shades of green, with a vitreous lustre; streak white, massive, and crystalized. Its constituents are—silica, 37.35; alumina, 23.53; protoxide of iron, 3.99; lime, 29.68; magnesia, &c., 5.208: sp. gr. 3.34. H = 6.

IDOL, i'dol, s. (idole, Fr. idolo, Span.) In Pagan Mythology, an image or fancied representation of any of the heathen gods. This image, of whatsoever materials composed, was, by certain ceremonies called consecration, converted into a god—but whilst under the artificer's hand it was only a mere statue;—a person loved and honoured to adoration; anything on which we set our affections to excess; a representation.—Obsolete in the last sense.

Do her adore with sacred reverence,

As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence.—

Spenser.

IDOLATER, i-dol'a-tur, s. One who pays divine honours to images; one who worships as a deity that which is not God; an adorer; a great admirer.

972

IDOLATRESS, i-dol'a-tres, s. A female who worships idols.

IDOLATRICAL, i-do-lat're-kal, a. Tending to idolatry.—Obsolete.

INDITER, in-di'tur, s. One who indites.

INDIVIDABLE, in-de-vid'e-a-bl, a. Not to be divided.

INDIVIDED.—See UNDIVIDED.

INDIVIDUAL, in-de-vid'u-al, a. (individuel, Fr. individuum, from in, and dividuum, divided, Lat.) Not divided; not to be divided; pertaining to one only;—s. a single person; a single plant or animal; a single thing of any kind. In the plural, it is seldom applied to anything except persons.

Under his great vicegerent reign abide United as one individual soul.—Milton.

INDIVIDUALISM, in-de-vid'u-al-izm, s. The state of individual interest, or attachment to the interests of individuals in preference to the common interests of society.

INDIVIDUALITY, in-de-vid-u-al'e-te, s. Separate or distinct existence. In Phrenology, that quality of the mind by which individual objects are attended to and particularized. Its excess induces personification of everything of which its possessor speaks. It is situated above the nose. Its great development enlarges the forehead between the eyebrows.

INDIVIDUALIZE, in-de-vid'u-al-izo, v. a. To distinguish; to select or mark as an individual, or to distinguish the peculiar properties of a person from others.

INDIVIDUALLY, in-de-vid'u-al-le, ad. With separate existence; separately; by itself; to the exclusion of others; inseparably; incommunicably.

Omniscience—an attribute individually proper to the Godhead.—Hakewell.

INDIVIDUATE, in-de-vid'u-ate, a. Undivided;—v. a. to make single; to distinguish from others of the same species.

Life is individuated into infinite numbers, that have their distinct sense and pleasure.—More.

INDIVISIBILITY—INDORSEE.

INDIVISIBILITY, in-de-viz-e-bil'e-te, s. The state of being indivisible.

INDIVISIBLE, in-de-viz'e-bl, a. Not to be divided, incapable of division or farther separation; a mathematical point is indivisible, having position but no magnitude;—s. in Geometry, indivisibles are the elementary parts or principles into which a body or figure may be resolved; elements infinitely small. Among Metaphysicians, a thing is said to be absolutely indivisible—that is, a simple being, when it consists of no parts into which it can be divided; thus, God is indivisible in all respects; as is also the human mind, not having extension or other properties of body.

INDIVISIBleness, in-de-viz'e-bl-nes, s. Same as Indivisibility.—Which see.

INDIVISIBLY, in-de-viz'e-bl, ad. So as not to be capable of division.

INDIVISION, in-de-viz'h'un, s. A state of not being divided.

INDOCIBLE, in-do'se-bl, a. (indocilis, Lat.) Not

INDOCILE, in-do'sile, } capable of being taught; very difficult to be instructed; dull in intellect; intractable.

INDOCILITY, in-do-sil'e-te, s. Unteachableness; dulness of intellect; intractableness.

INDOCTRINATE, in-dok'tre-nate, v. a. (endoctrinor, Fr. from in, and doctrina, learning, Lat.) To teach; to instruct in rudiments or principles.

He took much delight in indoctrinating his young inexperienced favourite.—Clarendon.

INDOCTRINATION, in-dok-tre-na'shun, s. Instruction in the rudiments and principles of any science; information.

INDOLENCE, in-do-lens, s. (indolentia, from in, and doleo, I am pained, Gr.) Literally, free from pain; habitual idleness; indisposition to labour; laziness; inaction of body or mind, proceeding from the love of ease or aversion to toil. Indolence, like laziness, implies a constitutional or habitual love of ease; idleness does not.

INDOLENT, in-do-lent, a. (French.) Habitually idle or indisposed to labour; lazy; listless; sluggish; indulging in ease; inactive; free from pain, as an indolent tamour.

INDOLENTLY, in-do-lent-le, ad. In habitual idleness and ease; without action, activity, or exertion; lazily.

Calm and serene you indolently sit.—Addison.

INDOMABLE, in-dom'a-bl, a. (indomabilis, Lat.) Untamable.—Obsolete.

INDOMITABLE, in-dom'e-ta-bl, a. (in, and domeo, I tame, Lat.) Not to be tamed.

INDOMITE, in-dom'ite, a. (indomitus, Lat.) Untamed; wild; savage.—Obsolete.

INDOMPTABLE, in-dom'ta-bl, a. (in, and domptor, to subdue, Fr.) Not to be subdued.

INDORSABLE, in-dawrs'a-bl, a. That may be indorsed, assigned, and made payable to order.

INDORSE, in-dawrs', v. a. (in, and dorsum, the back, Lat.) To write on the back of a paper or written instrument; to assign, by writing an order on the back of a note or bill; to assign or transfer by indorsement; to approve or indorse a statement or the opinions of another; to indorse in blank, to write a name only on a bill or note, leaving a blank to be filled up by the indorsee.

INDORSEE, in-dawr-se', s. The person to whom a bill or note is indorsed, or assigned by indorsement.

INDORSEMENT—INDUCT.

INDORSEMENT, in-dawrs'ment, s. (indorsementum, Lat.) Any writing on the back of a deed or other instrument is an indorsement: thus, the receipt for consideration-money on the back of a deed is an indorsement; so is the attestation clause when written on the back of a deed. So also, in the negotiating bills of exchange, he who writes his name on the back of the bill is termed the indorser, and he in whose favour it is indorsed, the indorsee. —2 Bl. 468. Indorsement of parliamentary bills, the official record of the assent of one house to the bills passed in the other, and is expressed on the back of the bill in old Norman French.

INDORSER, in-dawrs'sur, s. The person who indorses or writes his name on the back of a bill of exchange, and who, by this act, as the case may be, makes himself liable to pay the note or bill.

INDUBITABLENESS, in-du'be-ta-bl-nes, s. State of being indubitable.

INDUBITABLY, in-du'be-ta-ble, ad. Undoubtedly; unquestionably; in a manner to remove all doubt.

INDUBITATE, in-du'be-tate, a. (indubitatus, Lat.) Not questioned; evident; certain.—Obsolete.

INDUCE, in-duse', v. a. (induco, Lat.) To lead as by persuasion or argument; to prevail on; to influence by motives; to produce by influence; to bring on; to cause; to introduce; to bring into view; to offer by way of induction or inference.—Not used in this sense.

The poet may seem inducing his personages in the first Iliad.—Pope.

INDUCEMENT, in-duse'ment, s. Motive; anything that leads the mind to will and act. In Law, that portion of a declaration, or of any subsequent pleading in an action, which is brought forward by way of explanatory introduction to the main allegations. It is somewhat analogous to the preamble in an act of parliament, or to the recitals in a deed, and, like them, commonly commences with the word whereas. Matter of inducement is matter brought forward only by way of explanatory introduction to the main allegations of the declaration or plea, &c.

INDUCER, in-du'sur, s. He or that which induces, persuades, or influences.

INDUCIARY, in-du'se-er-e, a. Belonging to a truce.—Obsolete.

INDUCIBLE, in-duse'e-bl, a. That may be induced; that may be offered by induction; that may be caused.

INDUCT, in-dukt', v. a. (inductus, from induco, I introduce, Lat.) To bring in or introduce, as to a benefice or office; to put into actual possession of an ecclesiastical living, or any other office, with the customary forms and ceremonies.

INDUCTIBILITY—INDULTO.

INDUCTIBILITY, in-dukt-te-bil'e-te, s. The quality of not being ductile.

INDUCTILE, in-dukt'il, a. Not ductile; incapable of being drawn into fine wire, as certain metals are.

INDUCTILITY, in-dukt-il'e-te, s. The quality of being inductile.

INDUCTION, in-dukt'shun, s. (French.) Introduction; entrance. In Logic and Rhetoric, a consequence drawn from several propositions or principles first laid down on a general inference deduced from a number of facts, so arranged in the statement of them as to lead necessarily to the conclusion. In Electricity, that condition of an electrified substance, which, when opposed to another, causes the latter to acquire, under certain circumstances, an opposite electric state upon the surface opposed to the inducing body, and is rendered electro-polar. In Law, the giving the clerk or parson corporal possession of the church; and it is generally done by holding the ring of the door, tolling the bell, or some such form. The intention of it is, that the parishioners may have due notice and sufficient certainty of their new minister, to whom their tithes are to be paid.

INDUCTIVE, in-dukt'iv, a. Relating to induction; resting ultimately on experiment, although the truths admitted on experiment are carried into their remote consequences solely by deductive or abstract reasoning. Hence, Inductive Philosophy includes all learning deduced from experiment, as opposed to hypothetical or assumed definitions.

INDUCTIVELY, in-dukt'iv-le, ad. By the method of induction.

INDUCTOR, in-dukt'ur, s. The person who inducts another into a benefice or office.

INDUE.—See Endue.

INDULGE, in-dulj', v. a. (indulgeo, Lat.) To encourage by compliance; to permit to be, or not to restrain; to continue; to grant something not of right, but as a favour;—v. n. to permit to enjoy or practice, as to indulge in sin. The neuter form of this verb is elliptical, one's self, myself, himself, &c., being omitted—hence the verb has properly no neuter signification.

Most men are more willing to indulge (themselves) in easy vices, than to practise laborious virtues.—Dr. Johnson.

INDULGENCE, in-dul'jen-s, } s. Free permission
INDULGENCY, in-dul'jen-se, } to the appetites, human desires, passions, or will to operate and act; forbearance of restraint or control; yielding from fondness; favour granted; liberality; gratification. INFANT, in'fant, s. (infans, Lat.) A child in the first period of life, beginning at birth; a young babe. In Law, he who has not attained the age of legal capacity, which age is in general fixed at twenty-one years. For certain purposes, however, it arrives much earlier. Thus, in criminal cases, a person of the age of fourteen years may be capitally punished, but under the age of seven he cannot. A male at twelve years old may take the oath of allegiance; at fourteen, is so far at years of discretion that he may enter into a binding marriage; and at twenty-one he is at his own disposal, may aliene his land, and generally perform all the duties and enjoy all the privileges attaching to a citizen. A female also is at maturity at twelve years, and therefore may enter into a binding marriage, and at twenty-one may dispose of herself and all her property. This full age of twenty-one is completed on the day preceding the anniversary of a person's birth. And as, in the computation of time, the law in general allows no fraction of a day, it follows that, if he is born on the 1st of January, he is of an age to do any legal act on the morning of the last day of December, though he may not have lived twenty-one years by nearly forty-eight hours.—2 Stephen's Bl. 331, 332;—a. pertaining to infancy; young; tender; not mature.

INFUSORIA, in-fu-so're-a, s. A name given by zoologists to a class of animals, comprising microscopic animalculæ, developed in infusions of animal and vegetable substances, forming two orders in the classification of Cuvier, viz., the Rotifera and the Homogenia. These constitute the last and lowest link in the animal kingdom. Ehrenberg has ascertained that the Infusoria, which have hitherto been considered as scarcely organized, have an internal structure resembling that of the higher animals, viz., muscles, intestines, eyes, nerves, and male and female organs of reproduction. Some, according to this authority, are born alive, some produced by eggs, and others by spontaneous divisions of their bodies into two or more distinct animals. Their powers of reproduction are so great, that, from one individual, a million were produced in ten days; on the eleventh, twelve millions; and on the twelfth day, sixteen millions. Ehrenberg has described and figured more than five hundred species, and has found them in fog, in rain, and in snow.

IRIDESCENT, ir-e-des'sent, a. Having colours like the rainbow.

IRIDICTOMY, ir-e-dik'to-me, s. (iris, and tome, a cutting, Gr.) In Ophthalmic Surgery, excision of a portion of the iris for the formation of an artificial pupil.

IRIDINA, i-rid'e-na, s. A genus of Mollusca, in which the shell has the hinge margin granulated.
It forms the type of the subfamily Iridininae, the shells of which are narrow and greatly elongated; the hinge margin without teeth, and sometimes granulated.

IRIDIUM, i-rid'e-um, s. (iris, the rainbow, Gr. on account of the colours exhibited when dissolving in muriatic acid.) A metal of a whitish colour, not malleable, found in the ore of platinum, and in a native alloy with osmium: sp. gr. 18. Iridia chlorides, salts formed by the union of the chlorides of iridium with certain bases.

IRIDOSMINE, ir-e-dos'mine, s. (iridium, and os- mium.) A natural alloy of iridium and osmium, rarely found in a crystallized state, but generally in small irregular and flattened grains of a shining metallic lustre. According to Dr. Thomson, it consists of iridium, 72.9; osmium, 24.5; iron, 2.6: sp. gr. 18.25—19.5.  $H = 4.5$  or more.

IRINA, i-ri'na, s. (meaning not given.) A genus of trees, natives of Java: Order, Sapindaceae.

IRIS, i'ris, s. (Greek.) In Greek Mythology, the Messenger of the gods, or from the gods to men; any coloured circle surrounding another body, as 'the iris of the eye'; the rainbow. In Botany, the fleur-de-lis, a genus of plants: Type of the natural order Iridaceae.

IRISATED, i'ris-ay-ted, a. Exhibiting the prismatic colours; resembling the rainbow.

IRISED, i'risd, a. Containing colours like those of the rainbow.

IRISH, i'rish, a. Pertaining to Ireland;—s. the people of Ireland; the Celtic, or language spoken by the Celtic natives of Ireland. Irish ivy, the variety of ivy Hedera Canariensis, a native of the Canary Islands. Irish whin, a beautiful variety of the Ulex Europaeus, or common whin. Irish whorts, Centabrium, or St. Debae's heath, the plant Debercia polyfolium.

IRISHISM, i'rish-izm, s. A mode of speaking peculiar to the Irish.

IRISHRY, i'rish-re, s. The people of Ireland.

IRITIS, i-ri'tis, s. Inflammation of the iris of the eye.

IRK, erk, v. a. (Scotch.) To weary; to give pain:
it is used only impersonally, as 'it *irke*th me.'
It irks his heart he cannot be revenged.—Shaks.

IRKSOME, erk'sum, a. Wearisome; tedious.

IRKSOMELY, erk'sum-le, ad. In a wearisome manner.

IRKSOMENESS, erk'sum-nes, s. Wearisomeness; tediousness.

IRLBACHIA, erl-ba'ke-a, s. (in honour of Gabriel Count de Bray, of the dynasty of Irlbach.) A genus of plants: Order, Gentianaceae.

IRON, i'urn, s. (iren, Sax. airn, Scot. iarn, Icelan.)
The most common and useful of the metals.
Iron is distinguished from every other metal by its magnetical properties. It is attracted by the magnet, and acquires, under various conditions, the property of attracting other iron. Pure iron is of a whitish grey, or rather bluish colour, very slightly livid; but, when polished, it has a great deal of brilliancy. Its texture is either fibrous, fine-grained, or in dense plates. Its specific gravity varies from 7.6 to 7.8. It is the hardest and most elastic of all the metals. It is extremely ductile, and may therefore be drawn into wire as fine as a human hair; it is also more tenacious than any other metal, and yields with facility to pressure. It is extremely infusible, and when not in contact with the fuel, it cannot be melted by the heat which any furnace can excite: it is, however, softened by heat, still preserving its ductility; and when thus softened, different pieces may be united: this constitutes the valuable property of welding. It is very dilatable by heat. It is the only metal which takes fire by the collision of flint. Heated in contact with air it becomes oxidised. If intensely and briskly heated, it takes fire with scintillation, and becomes a black oxide.
It combines with carbon, and forms what is called steel. It combines with phosphorus in a direct and an indirect manner, and unites with sulphur readily by fusion. It decomposes water in the cold slowly, but rapidly when ignited. It decomposes most of the metallic oxides. All acids act upon iron. Very concentrated sulphuric acid has little or no effect upon it, but when diluted it oxidises it rapidly. The nitric acid oxidises it with great vehemence. Muriate of ammonia is decomposed by it. Nitrate of potass detonates very vigorously with it. Iron is likewise dissolved by alkaline sulphurets. It is capable of combining with a number of metals. It does not unite with lead or bismuth, and very feebly with mercury. It detonates by percussion with the oxygenated muriates.—Iron clay, a substance intermediate between basalt and wacke, of a reddish-brown colour, and occurring massive or vesicular. Iron flint, a variety of quartz presenting several shades of yellow and red: it contains about 5 per cent. iron, called also ferruginous quartz. Iron-founder, one who makes iron-castings. Iron-foundry, a place where iron-castings are made. Iron-hearted, hard-hearted. Iron-framed, framed of iron; having a firm frame. Iron glance, specular iron, or rhombohedral iron ore, a pure peroxide of iron, in the proportion of iron 69.34 to oxygen 30.66: sp. gr. 5.0—5.3. H=5.5—6.5. Iron liquor, acetate of iron, used as a mordant by dyers. Iron-monger, a dealer in iron and other hardwares. Iron mould, a mark on linen made by the rust of iron. Iron shod, shod with iron. Iron sick, a ship is said to be iron sick when her bolts and nails are so much corroded or eaten with rust that she has become leaky. Iron ore, an oxide of iron. Ironstone, an ore of iron, of which there are several varieties, as clay-ironstone and blackband ironstone, the latter so called from its containing coal. Iron-sided, having sides of iron; having very strong sides. Ironsmith, a worker in iron; a blacksmith. Iron pyrites, a mineral of a brass-yellow colour, approaching to bronze-yellow, occasionally to steel-grey. It is very abundant in nature, and occurs disseminated in rocks, veins, and beds, investing other minerals, and often enclosed in them. It assumes many forms, but, when crystalized, the cube is the most common, and sometimes the octahedron. It does not yield to the knife as copper pyrites does. It is composed, according to Dr. Thomson, of 2 atoms of sulphur and 1 of iron. The varieties are—Hepatic Pyrites, Arsenical Iron Pyrites, Auriferous Iron Pyrites, White Pyrites, Magnetic Iron Pyrites, Prismatical Iron Pyrites. Ironwood, the popular name of several genera and species of trees,—see Sideroxylon. Ironwork, the parts or pieces of a building or machine which consist of iron; anything made of iron. Iron-works, a work or establishment at which either pig or malleable iron is manufactured. Iron-wort,—see Sideritis;—an instrument made of iron;

Canst thou fill his skin with barbed irons?—Job xli.

figuratively, strength, power, as 'a rod of iron'; when used in the plural, it signifies chains, manacles, handcuffs, fetters, &c.;—a. made of iron; resembling iron in colour, as 'iron-grey'; harsh; rude; severe, as 'the iron age of the world'; binding fast; not to be broken, as 'the iron sleep of death'; hard of understanding; dull; as firm; robust, as 'an iron constitution.' Iron-bound, bound with iron; faced or surrounded with rocks, as 'an iron-bound coast'; iron-clad, clad or armed with iron;—v. a. to smooth with an instrument of iron; to shackle with irons; to fetter or handcuff; to furnish or arm with iron.

IRONIC, i-ron'ik, a. Ironical.

IRONICAL, i-ron'e-kal, a. (ironique, Fr.) Expressing one thing and meaning another.

IRONICALLY, i-ron'e-kal-e, ad. By way of irony; by the use of irony.

IRONIST, i-ron-ist, s. One who speaks by contraries.

IRONY, i'un-e, s. Made of iron; containing iron; resembling iron; hard.

IRONY, i'un-e, s. (ironie, Fr. ironia, Lat.) A mode of speech expressing a sense contrary to that which the speaker intends to convey.

IROUS, i'rus.—See Ireful.

IRRADIANCE, ir-ra'de-ans, } s. (irradians, Lat.)

IRRADIANCY, ir-ra'de-an-se, } Emission of rays of light; beams of light emitted.

IRRADIATE, ir-ra'de-ate, v. a. (irradio, from in, and radio, to shine, Lat.) To dart rays into; to adorn with light; to animate by heat or light; to decorate with shining ornaments; to enlighten intellectually; to illuminate; to make splendid;—v. n. to emit rays;—a. adorned with brightness.

IRRADIATION, ir-ra-de-a'shun, s. The act of emitting beams of light; illumination; brightness; intellectual light.

IRRATIONAL, ir-rash'e-nal, a. (irrationalis, in, and rationalis, from ratio, Lat.) Not rational; void of understanding; contrary to reason; not according to the dictates of reason; absurd.

IRRATIONALITY, ir-rash-o-nal'e-ty, s. Want of reason, or the powers of understanding.

IRRATIONALLY, ir-rash'o-nal-e, ad. Without reason; absurdly.

IRRECLAIMABLE, ir-re-kl'a-ma-bl, a. Not to be reclaimed; that cannot be recalled from error or vice.

IRRECLAIMABLY, ir-re-kl'a-ma-ble, ad. So as not to be redeemed or recalled; in an irreclaimable manner.

IRRECONCILABLE, ir-re-kon-sil'e-a-bl, a. Not to be recalled to amity; unappeasable; retaining enmity; that cannot be made to agree or be consistent.

IRRECONCILABLENESS, ir-re-kon-sil'e-a-bl-nes, }

IRRECONCILEMENT, ir-re-kon-sil'e-ment, } s.

IRRECONCILIATION, ir-re-kon-sil'e-a'shun, } Want of reconciliation; disagreement; quality of being disagreeable.

IRRECONCILABLY, ir-re-kon-sil'e-a-ble, ad. In a manner not admitting of reconciliation.

IRRECONCILE, ir-rek'on-sile, v. a. To prevent from being reconciled.

IRRECONCILED, ir-rek'on-silde, a. Not reconciled; not atoned for.

IRRECORDABLE, ir-re-kawrd'a-bl, a. Not to be recorded.

IRRECOVERABLE, ir-re-kuv'ur-a-bl, a. Not to be recovered; not to be restored or remedied; that cannot be regained; that cannot be obtained by demand or suit, as a debt.

IRRECOVERABLENESS, ir-re-kuv'ur-a-bl-nes, s. The state of being irrecoverable.

IRRECOVERABLY, ir-re-kuv'ur-a-ble, ad. Beyond

recovery; beyond the possibility of being regained, repaired, or remedied.

IRRECUPERABLE, ir-re-ku'per-a-bl, a. (in, and recupero, to recover, Lat.) Irrecoverable.—Obsolete.

IRRECUPERABLY, ir-re-ku'per-a-ble, ad. Irrecoverably.—Obsolete.

IRREDEEMED, ir-re-ku'de', a. Not to be cured.—Obsolete.

Striking his soul with irrecurred wounds.—

IRRECUSABLE, ir-re-ku'sa-bl, a. (in, and recusare, Fr.) Not liable to exception.

IRREDEEMABLE, ir-re-deem'a-bl, a. That cannot be redeemed.

IRREDEEMABLENESS, ir-re-deem'a-bl-nes, } s. The IRREDEEMABILITY, ir-re-deem-a-bl'e-te, } quality of being not redeemable.

IRREDUCIBLE, ir-re-du'se-bl, a. Not reducible; that cannot be reduced or changed to a different state.

IRREDUCIBLENESS, ir-re-du'se-bl-nes, s. The quality of being irreducible.

IRREDUCIBLY, ir-re-du'se-ble, ad. In a manner not reducible.

IRREFLECTIVE, ir-re-flek'tiv, a. Not reflective.

IRREFRAGABLE, ir-re-frag'a-bl, a. (refragor, Lat.) Literally, not to be broken; not to be refuted or overthrown; incontestable; undeniable, as 'an irrefragable argument.'

IRREFRAGABLENESS, ir-ref'ra-ga-bl-nes, } s. The IRREFRAGABILITY, ir-ref-ra-ga-bl'e-te, } quality of being irrefragable, or incapable of refutation.

IRREFRAGABLY, ir-ref'ra-ga-ble, ad. Irrefutably.

IRREFUTABLE, ir-re-fu'ta-bl, a. Not to be refuted.

IRREFUTABLY, ir-re-fu'ta-ble, ad. Beyond the possibility of refutation.

IRREGENERACY, ir-re-jen'er-a-se, s. Unregeneration.

IRREGULAR, ir-reg'u-lar, a. (irregularis, Lat.) Not regular; deviating from rule or custom; unmethodical; anomalous; not restrained as to personal conduct. In Grammar, an irregular verb or noun, one which does not follow the regular inflections;—s. a soldier not in regular service.

Irregular cadence, in Music, a cadence which does not end upon the essential chord of the mode in which a piece is composed.

IRREGULARITY, ir-regu-lar'e-te, s. Deviation from rule; neglect of order; inordinate practice; vice.

IRREGULARLY, ir-reg'u-lar-le, ad. In an irregular manner; without rule, method, or order.

IRREGULATE, ir-reg'u-late, v. a. To make irregular; to disorder.—Obsolete.

Which winds, shelves, and every interjacency irregularities.—Brown.

IRRELATIVE, ir-rel'a-tiv, a. Not relative; unconnected.

IRRELATIVELY, ir-rel'a-tiv-le, ad. Unconnectedly.

IRRELEVANCY, ir-rel'e-van-se, s. Inapplicability; the quality of not being applicable, or of not serving to aid and support.

IRRELEVANT, ir-rel'e-vant, a. Not relevant; not applicable or pertinent; not serving to support.

IRRELEVANTLY, ir-rel'e-vant-le, ad. Without being to the purpose.

IRRELIEVABLE, ir-re-le'va-bl, a. Not admitting relief.

IRRELIGION—IRREPRESENTABLE.

IRRELIGION, ir-re-lij'un, s. (French.) Want or contempt of religion; impiety.

IRRELIGIONIST, ir-re-lij'un-ist, s. One destitute of religious principles; a despiser of religion.

IRRELIGIOUS, ir-re-lij'us, a. (irreligieux, Fr.) Not religious; impious; ungodly; contemning religion; contrary to religion; wicked.

IRRELIGIOUSLY, ir-re-lij'us-le, ad. With impiety; irreligious.

IRRELIGIOUSNESS, ir-re-lij'us-nes, s. Want of religious principles or practices; ungodliness.

IRREMEABLE, ir-re-me'a-bl, a. (irremediabilis, Lat.) Admitting no return.

The keeper chain'd, the chief without delay

Pass'd on, and took the irremediable way.—Dryden.

IRREMEDIABLE, ir-re-me'de-a-bl, a. Not to be remedied; admitting of no cure; not to be corrected or redressed.

IRREMEDIABLENESS, ir-re-me'de-a-bl-nes, s. The quality or state of being irremediable.

IRREMEDIABLY, ir-re-me'de-a-ble, ad. So as to preclude remedy.

IRREMISSIBLE, ir-re-mis'se-bl, a. Not to be remitted; unpardonable.

IRREMISSIBLENESS, ir-re-mis'se-bl-nes, s. The quality of being unpardonable.

IRREMISSIBLY, ir-re-mis'se-ble, ad. Unpardonably.

IRREMOVABILITY, ir-re-moov-a-bl'e-te, s. The quality or state of not being removable.

IRREMOVABLE, ir-re-moov'a-bl, a. That cannot be moved or changed; that cannot be legally or constitutionally removed from office.

IRREMOVABLY, ir-re-moov'a-ble, ad. So as not to admit of a removal.

IRREMOVAL, ir-re-moov'al, s. Absence of removal.—Seldom used.

IRREMUNERABLE, ir-re-mu'ner-a-bl, a. That cannot be rewarded.

IRRENOWNED, ir-re-nownd', a. Unrenowned.—Obsolete.

To slug in sloth and sensual delight,

And end their days in irrenowned shame.—

Spenser.

IRREPARABILITY, ir-rep'a-ra-bl'e-te, s. The quality of being beyond repair; irrecoverable.

IRREPARABLE, ir-rep'a-ra-bl, a. That cannot be repaired or mended; that cannot be recovered or regained.

IRREPARABLY, ir-rep'a-ra-ble, ad. In a manner or degree that precludes recovery or repair.

IRREPEALABILITY, ir-re-peel-a-bl'e-te, } s. The IRREPEALABLENESS, ir-re-peel'a-bl-nes, } quality of being irrepealable.

IRREPEALABLE, ir-re-peel'a-bl, a. That cannot legally be repealed or annulled.

IRREPEALABLY, ir-re-peel'a-ble, ad. Beyond the power of repeal.

IRREPENTANCE, ir-re-pen'tans, s. Impenitence.

IRREPLEVABLE, ir-re-plev'e-a-bl, } a. Not to IRREPLEVISABLE, ir-re-plev'e-a-bl, } be redeemed or replevied.

IRREPREHENSIBLE, ir-re-pre-hen'se-bl, a. Not reprehensible, free from fault exempt from blame.

IRREPREHENSIBLENESS, ir-re-pre-hen'se-bl-nes, s. The quality of being irreprehensible.

IRREPREHENSIBLY, ir-re-pre-hen'se-ble, ad. In a manner not to incur blame.

IRREPRESENTABLE, ir-rep-pre-zent'a-bl, a. Not to be represented; that cannot be figured or represented by any image.

IRREPRESSIBLE—IRRETRIEVABLENESS.

IRREPRESSIBLE, ir-re-pres'e-bl, a. That cannot be repressed.

IRREPROACHABLE, ir-re-protsh'e-a-bl, a. Free from blame; upright; innocent; not reproachable.

IRREPROACHABLENESS, ir-re-protsh'e-a-bl-nes, s. Blamelessness.

IRREPROACHABLY, ir-re-protsh'e-a-ble, ad. Blamelessly; innocently.

IRREPROVABLE, ir-re-proov'a-bl, a. That cannot be justly reprov'd; blameless; upright; irreproachable.

IRREPROVABLY, ir-re-proov'a-ble, ad. Beyond reproach.

IRREPTITIOUS, ir-rep-tish'us, a. Secretly introduced.

IRRESISTANCE.—See Non-resistance.

IRRESISTIBILITY, ir-re-zist'e-bil'e-te, } s. The IRRESISTIBLENESS, ir-re-zist'e-bl-nes, } quality or state of being irresistible or indissoluble.

IRRESISTIBLE, ir-re-zist'e-bl, a. That cannot be successfully resisted or opposed; superior to opposition.

IRRESISTIBLY, ir-re-zist'e-ble, ad. So as not to be resisted.

IRRESISTLESS, ir-re-zist'les, a. That cannot be resisted.

IRRESOLUBLE, ir-rez'o-lu-bl, ad. (in, and resolvo, Lat.) Not to be dissolved; incapable of dissolution.

IRRESOLUBLENESS, ir-rez'o-lu-bl-nes, s. The quality of being indissoluble.

IRRESOLUTE, ir-rez'o-lute, a. Not resolute.

IRRESOLUTELY, ir-rez'o-lute-le, ad. Without firmness of mind.

IRRESOLUTENESS, ir-rez'o-lute-nes, s. Want of firmness of mind.

IRRESOLUTION, ir-rez'o-lu-shun, s. Want of resolution; indecision of purpose.

IRRESOLVABILITY, ir-re-zol'va-bil'e-te, } s. The IRRESOLVABLENESS, ir-re-zol'va-bl-nes, } state or quality of not being resolvable.

IRRESOLVABLE, ir-re-zol'va-bl, a. That cannot be resolved.

IRRESOLVEDLY, ir-re-zol'ved-le, ad. Without settled determination.

IRRESPECTIVE, ir-re-spek'tiv, a. Not regarding circumstances.

IRRESPECTIVELY, ir-re-spek'tiv-le, ad. Without regard to circumstances.

IRRESPIRABLE, ir-re-spi'ra-bl, a. Unfit for respiration.

IRRESPONSIBILITY, ir-re-spon-se-bil'e-te, s. Want of responsibility.

IRRESPONSIBLE, ir-re-spon'se-bl, a. Not responsible; not liable or able to answer for consequences; not answerable.

IRRESPONSIBLY, ir-re-spon'se-ble, ad. So as not to be responsible.

IRRESUSCITABLE, ir-re-sus'se-ta-bl, a. Not capable of being revived.

IRRESUSCITABLY, ir-re-sus'se-ta-ble, ad. In such a state as cannot be revived.

IRRETENTIVE, ir-re-ten'tiv, a. Not retentive or apt to retain.

IRRETRACEABLE, ir-re-tra'sa-bl, a. That cannot be retraced.

IRRETRIEVABLE, ir-re-treev'a-bl, a. Not to be retrieved.

IRRETRIEVABLENESS, ir-re-treev'a-bl-nes, s. State of being irretrievable.

IRRETRIEVABLY—IRRITATION.

IRRETRIEVABLY, ir-re-treev'a-ble, ad. Irreparably; irrecoverably.

IRRETURNABLE, ir-re-tur'n'a-bl, a. Not to be returned.

IRREVEALABLE, ir-re-ve'la-bl, a. That may not be revealed.

IRREVEALABLY, ir-re-ve'la-ble, ad. So as may not be revealed.

IRREVERENCE, ir-rev'er-ens, s. (irreverentia, Lat.) Want of reverence or veneration to the authority and character of God; the state of being disregarded.

IRREVEREND, ir-rev'er-end, a. Disrespectful.—Obsolete.

IRREVERENT, ir-rev'er-ent, a. (French.) Wanting in reverence and veneration; proceeding from irreverence; want of respect to superiors.
Witness the irreverent son
Of him who built the ark.—Milton.

IRREVERENTLY, ir-rev'er-ent-le, ad. In an irreverent manner.

IRREVERSIBLE, ir-re-ver'se-bl, a. Not reversible.

IRREVERSIBLENESS, ir-re-ver'se-bl-nes, s. State of being irreversible.

IRREVERSIBLY, ir-re-ver'se-ble, ad. In a manner so as to preclude reversal or repeal.

IRREVOCABILITY, ir-re-vo-ka-bil'e-te, } s. The IRREVOCABLENESS, ir-re-vo-ka-bl-nes, } state of being irrevocable.

IRREVOCABLE, ir-re-vo-ka-bl, a. Not to be revoked.

IRREVOCABLY, ir-re-vo-ka-ble, ad. Beyond recall.

IRREVOLUBLE, ir-rev'o-lu-bl, a. That has no revolution.—Obsolete.
Progressing the dateless and irrevocable circle of eternity.—Milton.

IRRIGATE, ir-re-gate, v. a. (irrigo, Lat.) To sprinkle water on; to wet; to moisten; to supply land with streams of water.

IRRIGATION, ir-re-ga'shun, s. The act of watering in agriculture; the operation of causing water to flow over land for their nourishment.

IRRIGUOUS, ir-rig'u-us, a. (irriguus, Lat.) Watered; watery; moist; dewy.
The flowery lap
Of some irriguous valley spreads her store.—Milton.

IRRISION, ir-rish'un, s. (irrisio, Lat.) The act of laughing at another.

IRRITABILITY, ir-re-ta-bil'e-te, s. The quality of being irritable; susceptibility of excitement.

IRRITABLE, ir-re-ta-bl, a. Easily provoked; very susceptible of excitement. In Physiology, susceptible of contraction, in consequence of the appulse of an external body.
In general there is nothing irritable but the muscular fibres.—Haller.

IRRITANCY, ir-re-tan-se, s. The state of being irritant.

IRRITANT, ir-re-tant, a. Irritating;—s. that which excites or irritates.

IRRITATE, ir-re-tate, v. a. (irritio, Lat.) To excite heat and redness in the skin or flesh of animal bodies; to inflame; to fret; to excite ire or anger; to provoke; to exasperate; to agitate; to heighten excitement in; to render null and void;—(obsolete in the last sense;—a. heightened.—Obsolete as an adjective.
Air, if very cold, irritates the flame.—Bacon.

IRRITATION, ir-re-ta'shun, s. Provocation; heat; excitement. In Pathology, the condition of an organ or organic tissue, wherein exists an excess of internal vital movement, commonly manifested by exaltation of the circulation and sensibility; the morbid super-excitation of vitality.

IRRITATIVE, ir're-tay-tiv, a. Tending to excite; producing irritation.

IRRITATORY, ir're-tay-tur-e, a. Stimulating; exciting.

IRRORATION, ir-ro-ra'shun, s. (irroratio, Lat.) The act of bedewing; state of being moistened with dew.

IRRUPTION, ir-rup'shun, s. A bursting in; a violent rushing into a place; a sudden invasion or incursion.

IRRUPTIVE, ir-rup'tiv, a. Rushing in or upon.

IS, iz, (Saxon.) The third person singular of the present tense of the indicative mood of the verb To be, as 'he, she, or it is.'

ISABEL, iz'a-bel, s. (isabele, Fr.) A colour of a brownish-yellow, with a shade of brownish-red.

ISACHNE, i-sak'ne, s. (isos, equal, and achne, a glume, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Gramineæ.

ISAGOGIC, i-sa-goj'ik, } a. (eisagogikos, Gr.)

ISAGOGICAL, i-sa-goj'e-kal, } Introductory.

ISAGON, i'sa-gon, s. (isos, equal, and gonia, an angle, Gr.) A figure whose angles are equal.

ISALAH, i-za'ya, s. (Hebrew.) The name of one of the prophetic books of the Old Testament.

ISANTHERA, i-san-the'ra, s. (isos, equal, and anthera, an anther, Gr. in reference to the five stamens being equal.) A genus of plants, natives of the East Indies: Order, Verbasceæ of Don. It is also a name given by Nees to a genus of plants belonging to the order Gesneriæ.

ISANTHUS, i-san'thus, s. (isos, equal, and anthos, a flower, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Lamiacæ.

ISARIA, i-sa're-a, s. (isos, equal, Gr. perhaps from the equality of the filaments.) A genus of Fungi: Tribe, or Order, Hyphomycetes.

ISATINE, i-sa-tine, s. A compound obtained when indigo is oxidized by means of sulphuric acid and bichromate of potash. It forms hyacinth, red, or orange-red crystals of a brilliant lustre. Isatine dissolves in caustic potash with a purple colour, which passes into yellow on the application of heat. The liquid yields on evaporation isatate of potash, as a crystalline salt, which, when recrystallized from alcohol, forms small hard colourless prisms. This salt gives with acetate of lead a white precipitate, isatate of lead, which, when decomposed by sulphuretted hydrogen, yields a solution of the acid. Isatic acid is decomposed from this solution by spontaneous evaporation, as a white powder; hardly crystalline.—Turner.

ISATIS, i-sa'tis, s. (isazo, I render equal, Gr. in reference to the supposed quality of the plant in removing, by its simple application, all roughness and inequalities of the skin.) Woad, a genus of tall, annual, or biennial branched cruciferous herbs, all the species of which furnish a blue dye, especially that of I. tinctoria, the dye of which is like indigo, and is used as such: Type of the tribe Isatideæ.

ISATYDE, i'sa-tide, s. In Chemistry, a yellowish-white powder, obtained when isatine is dissolved in hydrosulphuret of ammonia. Formula, C<sub>12</sub>, H<sub>6</sub>, NO<sub>3</sub>.

ISCA, is'ka, s. An excrescence of the oak.

ISCHÆMUM, is-ke'mum, s. (ischo, I stop, and kainn, blood, Gr. from the woolly seed having the power of stopping bleeding at the nose when introduced into the nostrils.) A genus of plants: Order, Gramineæ.

ISCHIADIC, isk-e-ad'ik, a. Pertaining to the ischium. Ischiadic artery, a branch of the internal iliac, which passes out at the ischiadic foramen between the piriform and gemelli muscles, in company with the great sciatic nerve. It is distributed within the pelvis to the rectum and the internal obturator, piriform, coccygeal, and levator ani muscles; after its passage out of the pelvis, it is distributed chiefly to the rotator muscles of the thigh. It sends a twig down on the surface of the sciatic nerve. Ischiadic foramen, the innominatum os.

ISCHIAGRA, isk-e-ag'ra, s. A gummy affection of the haunch, same as Neuralgia of the thigh.

ISCHIAL, isk'e-al, a. Belonging to or contributed by the ischium.

ISCHIALGIA, isk-e-al'je-a, s. (iskion, the ischium, and agos, pain, Gr.) Pain about the haunch, or coxo-femoral articulation, or in the course of the ischiatic nerve.

ISCHIATIC.—See Ischiadic.

ISCHIDROSIS, isk-e-dro'sis, s. (ischo, I suppress, and idros, sweat, Gr.) Suppression of the perspiration.

ISCHIOCELE, isk-e-o-se'le, } s. Hernia, form-

ISCHIATOCELE, isk-e-a-to-se'le, } ed by protrusion of the viscera through the great ischiatic foramen.

NOTE.—The following names have been given by Chaussier and Dumas to muscles, &c., connected with the ischium:—

Ischio-clitorema arteria, the branch of the internal pudic, which furnishes the two arteries of the clitoris. Ischio-clitorianus, the nerve of the clitoris—a branch of the pudic. Ischio-clitorideus, the Erector clitoridis. Ischio-coccygeus, the muscle more generally called coccygeus. Ischio-femoralis, Chaussier's name for the Abductor magnus femoris. Ischio-femoro-peroneus, the biceps femoris. Ischio-perinealis, the transversus perinei muscle. Ischio-popliteo-tibialis, the semi-membranosus muscle. Ischio-prætibialis, the semi-tendinous muscle. Ischio-prostaticus, a name given by some anatomists to the muscular fibres, otherwise called Transversus perinei alter. Ischio-pubi-femoralis, the Abductor magnus femoris. Ischio-pubi-prostaticus, the Transversus perinei. Ischio-trochanteriani, the gemelli muscles.

ISCHOBLENIA, is-ko-blen'ne-a, s. (ischo, I suppress, and blenna, mucus, Gr.) Suppression of a mucons discharge. French Pathologists likewise use the following terms, which are here Latinized:—Ischoilia, suppression of feces; constipation. Ischogalactia, suppression of milk. Ischolochia, suppression of the lochial discharge. Ischomenia, suppression of menstrual discharge. Ischopyosis, suppression of an habitual purulent secretion.

ISCHOPHONY, is kof'o-ne, s. (eschophonia, Gr.) The act of stammering; impeded utterance.

ISCHURETIC, is-ku-ret'ik, a. Relieving ischury;—a medicine to relieve ischury.

ISCHURIA, is-ku're-a, } s. (ischouria, Gr.) A stop-

ISERINE—ISLAND.

ISERINE, i-ser'-ine, s. (Iser, a river in Sillesia, called also Menceunite, from its being found in the bed of a rivulet, near Menaceau, in Cornwall.) A titanic iron, in the form of black sand. Menaceunite consists of oxide of titanium, 45.25; oxide of iron, 51.00; oxide of manganese, 0.25; silica, 3. Iserine, according to Dr. Thomson, is composed of oxide of titanium, 48.00; oxide of iron, 48.; oxide of uranium, 4.00.

ISERTIA, i-ser'-she-a, s. (in honour of P. E. Isert, surgeon in the Danish service.) A genus of South American trees or shrubs with scarlet flowers: Order, Cinchonaceæ.

ISETHIONATES, i-se-the'-o-nayts, s. A family of salts, formed by the union of isethionic acid (the formula of which is  $2SO_3$ , C<sub>4</sub>, H<sub>5</sub>, O) with salifiable bases. The following are the principle Isethionates:—Isethionate of ammonia, which crystallizes in octahedrons; Isethionate of potash, forming anhydrous; colourless, transparent, broad plates; Isethionate of copper, which occurs in sea-green regular octahedrons, containing atoms of water of crystallization, which are expelled by a heat of 230°, when the crystals become milk white; Isethionate of silver is very soluble, and crystallizes in brilliant broad plates; Isethionate of lead crystallizes in hard anhydrous needles formed in radiant groups.

ISII, ish, (isc, Sax. isk, Dan. isch, Germ.) A termination of English words. Annexed to English adjectives, ish denotes diminution, or a small degree of the quality, as whittish, from white. Ish, annexed to names, forms a possessive adjective, as in Swedish, Danish, English. Ish annexed to common substantives forms an adjective denoting a participation of the qualities expressed by the substantive, as foolish from fool.

ISIAC, i'se-ak, a. Pertaining to Isis, as the Isiac Table in the Turin museum, which was long supposed to represent the mysteries of Isis, but has been judged by Champollion to be the work of an uninitiated artist little acquainted with the workshop of the goddess, and probably of the age of Hadrian.

ISCLE.—See Icicle.

ISINGLASS, i'zing-glas, s. A substance procured from different kinds of fish. It is almost wholly pure gelatine, ninety-eight parts out of every hundred of good isinglass dissolving in water. It forms a nutritious jelly when boiled, and is in much request by confectioners and others.

ISIS, i'sis, s. The principal deity of the ancient Egyptians—the sister and wife of Osiris. She was generally represented holding a sistrum, sometimes a serpent, butterfly, helm, or setella in her hand, and with a vase carried in procession before her. In Zoology, a genus of corals, in which the axis is ramous and without cells on the surface: Family, Corticuli.

ISLAMISM, is'lām-ism, s. (from salama, to be free, safe, or devoted to God, Armor.) The true faith according to the Mohammedans; Mohammedanism.

ISLAND, i'land, s. (eiland, Sax. eiland, Germ.) A quantity of land entirely surrounded by water. Island of ice, a name given to a great quantity of ice collected into one huge solid mass, and floating about on the seas, near or within the polar circle. Islands of the blessed, or, the happy islands, in Grecian Mythology, islands supposed to be situated westward in the ocean to which the souls of the virtuous were transported after death.

ISLANDER, i'lan-dur, s. An inhabitant of an island.

ISLANDY, i'lan-de, a. Full of, or belonging to islands.

ISLE, ile, s. (French.) A tract of land surrounded by water, or a detached portion of land imbosomed in the ocean, in a lake or river. Improperly written Aisle.

ISLET, i'let, s. A little island.

ISMAELEANS, is-ma-e'-le-ans, s. A Mohammedan sect which derived its name from maintaining the pretensions of Ismael, the son of Jaafar, to the rank of Imam to the exclusion of Moussa. The Ismaeleans formed a secret association, founded in the 10th century of the Christian era by Abdulla, a Persian.

ISMELIA, is-me'-le-a, s. (meaning unknown.) A genus of Composite plants: Suborder, Tubulifloræ.

ISMENE, is-me'-ne, s. (Greek, the daughter of Œdipus and Jocasta.) A genus of plants: Order, Amarillidaceæ.

ISNARDIA, is-nâr'-de-a, s. (named by Linnæus in honour of Antoine Dante Isnard.) A genus of aquatic or marsh plants: Order, Onagraceæ.

ISO, i'so. A prefix shortened from isos, a Greek adjective, signifying equal.

ISOCARDIA, i-so-kar'-de-a, s. (isos, equal, and kardia, the heart, Gr.) A genus of Mollusca, in which the shell is heart-shaped, regular, and turbinate; the bosses remote, receding, and turbinate; and the cardinal teeth lamellar: Family, Chamaidæ.

ISOCARPHA, i-so-kar'-fa, s. (isos, equal, and karphe, chaff, Gr. in allusion to the quality of the chaff of the receptacle, and the leaves of the involucre.) A genus of Composite plants: Suborder, Tubulifloræ.

ISOCERAS, i-sos'e'-rus, s. (isos, equal, and keras, a horn, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Melasoma.

ISOCHIMAL, i-so-ki'-mal, a. (isos, equal, and cheimom, winter, Gr.) Having equal winter, or the same degree of cold.

ISOCHILUS, i-so-ki'-lus, s. (isos, equal, and cheilos, a lip, Gr. in allusion to the equality of the lip and other divisions of the flower as to breadth.) A genus of plants: Order, Orchidaceæ.

ISOCHROMATIC, i-so-kro-mat'-ik, a. (isos, equal, and chroma, colour, Gr.) In Optics, having the same colours. Isochromatic lines, are those coloured rings which appear when a pencil of polarized light is transmitted along the axis of a crystal, as mica or nitre, and is received in the eye after passing through a plate of tourmaline.

ISOCHRONAL, i-sok'-ro-nal, } a. (isochronous, Gr.)

ISOCHRONOUS, i-sok'-ro-nus, } Taking place at the same time.

ISOCHRONISM, i-sok'-ro-nizm, s. The quality of occurring at the same time.

ISODOMON, i-sod'-o-mon, s. (Greek.) In Grecian Architecture, a construction of equal thickness and equal length.

ISODORIA, i-so-do'-re-a, s. (isodos, the Latin name of a shrub like coral. The name is applied to this genus because it is stiff and dry, and grows by the sea-side.) A genus of plants, natives of the West Indies: Order, Cinchonaceæ.

ISOETES, i-so-e'-tes, s. (isos, equal, and etos, the year, from its retaining nearly the same appearance, during the whole year.) Quillwort, a genus of aquatic plants with long cylindrical leaves: Order, Marsileaceae.

ISOGEOTHERMAL, i-so-je-o-ther'mal, a. (isos, equal, ge, the earth, and therme, heat, Gr.) Connecting the points of equal temperature in the interior of the earth.

ISOLATE, iz'o-late, v. a. To place in a detached position; to insulate.

ISOLATED, iz'o-lay-ted, a. Detached.

ISOLATION, iz'o-lay-shun, s. The state of being isolated or alone.

ISOLEPIS, i-sol'e-pis, s. (isos, equal, and lepis, a scale, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Cyperaceae.

ISOMERIC, i-som'er-ik, a. Possessing the same proportions, but different properties.

ISOMERISM, i-som'er-izm, s. (isos, equal, and meros, a part, Gr.) Identity of elements and proportions with diversity of properties.

ISOMORPHISM, i-so-mawr'fizm, s. The quality of a substance by which it is capable of replacing another in a compound; the quality of assuming the same crystalline form though composed of different elements or proximate principles, yet with the same number of equivalents.

ISOMORPHOUS, i-so-mawr'fus, a. Capable of retaining its primitive form or crystal in a compound, though differing in the number of equivalents.

ISONEMA, i-so-ne'ma, s. (isos, equal, and nema, a filament, Gr.) A genus of African plants: Order, Apocynaceae.

ISONOMY, i-son'o-me, s. (isos, equal, and nomos, law, Gr.) Equal law; equal distribution of rights and privileges.

ISOPERIMETRICAL, i-so-per-e-met're-kal, a. In Geometry, having equal boundaries, as equal perimeters or circumferences.

ISOPERIMETRY, i-so-per-im'et-re, s. The science of figures, which have equal perimeters or boundaries.

ISOPLEXIS, i-so-pleks'is, s. (isos, equal, and pleko, I plait, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Scrophulariaceae.

ISOPOD, i'so-pod, s. A crustacean, the legs of which are all alike;—a. having an equal number of feet.

ISOPODA, i-sop'o-da, s. Isopods, an order of aquatic Crustaceans, characterised by having uniformly fourteen equal feet, unguiculated, and without any vesicular appendage at their base.

ISOPODIFORM, i-so-pod'e-lawrn, a. An epithet applied to the larvæ of saprophagous hexapods.

ISOPODOUS, i-sop'o-dus, a. Equal-footed; relating to the Isopoda.

ISOPOGON, i-so-po'gon, s. (isos, and pogon, a beard, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Proteaceae.

ISOPYRE, i'so-pire, s. (isos, equal, and pyr, fire, because the effect produced on it by the blowpipe is the same as that produced on several other minerals.) A mineral which occurs in compact masses of a violet-black colour, occasionally dotted with red, as in heleotrope; lustre vitreous; brittle. Its constituents are—silica, 47.09; alumina, 13.91; peroxide of iron, 20.07; lime, 15.43; peroxide of copper, 1.94: sp. gr. 2.9—3.0. H = 6.0—6.5. This mineral resembles obsidian, but has a fainter and less vitreous lustre.

ISOPYRUM, i-so-pi'rum, s. (isos, equal, and pyros, wheat; a name given by the Greeks to a plant resembling Nigella, the seeds of which had the same taste.) A genus of small erect herbs with white flowers: Order, Ranunculaceae.

ISOSCELES, i-sos'se-lez, s. (isosceles, Gr.) A figure which has only two sides equal, as an isosceles triangle.

ISOSTEMONOUS, i-so-stem'o-nus, a. (isos, and stemon, a stamen, Gr.) In Botany, having the stamens and petals equal in number.

ISOTHERMAL, i-so-ther'mal, a. (isos, equal, and therma, heat, Gr.) Isothermal lines, are those which pass through those parts of the earth's surface at which the mean annual temperature is the same. Isothermal zones, are spaces on opposite sides of the equator, having the same mean temperature, and bounded by correspondent isothermal lines. On account of the irregular form and disposition of the continental masses, by which the climate of different places is greatly influenced, the isothermal lines are not parallel to the equator, except in very low latitudes.

ISOTOMA, i-sot'o-ma, s. (isos, equal, and tome, a section, Gr. in reference to the segments of the corolla being nearly equal.) A genus of herbaceous plants: Order, Lobeliaceae.

ISOTONIC, i-so-ton'ik, a. Having equal tones.

ISPIDA, is-pi'da, s. A genus of birds allied to the Kingfishers, chiefly American: Family, Halcyonidae.

ISRAELITE, iz'ray-el-ite, s. A descendant of Israel or Jacob.

ISRAELITIC, iz-ray-el-et'ik, } a. Pertaining or ISRAELITISH, iz-ray-el-et'ish, } belonging to Israel; Jewish.

ISSUABLE, ish-u'a-bl, a. So as to bring issue.

ISSUANT, ish'su-ant, a. In Heraldry, applied to any beast issuing out of the bottom line of any chief or fess.

ISSUE, ish'u, s. (French.) Exit; egress or passage; out; event; consequence; conclusion; sequel deduced from premises; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of matter; a fontanel; evacuation; progeny; offspring; in Law, the disputed point or question to which the parties in an action have narrowed their several allegations, and upon which they are desirous of obtaining the decision of the proper tribunal. When the plaintiff and defendant have arrived at some specific point or matter affirmed on the one side and denied on the other, they are said to be at issue (ad exitum, i. e. at the end of their pleading); the question so set apart is called the issue, and is designated, according to its nature, as an issue in fact or an issue in law. If it is an issue in fact, it is (almost universally) tried by the country (i. e. by a jury of twelve men); if an issue in law, by the judges of the land constituting the court in which the action has been brought;—v. n. to come out; to pass out of any place; to break out; to proceed as an offspring;—v. a. to send out; to send forth; to send out judicially or authoritatively.

ISSUED, ish'ud, a. Descended.

ISSUELESS, ish'u-less, a. Having no offspring or progeny.

ISSUER, ish'shu-ur, s. One who issues, or emits.

ISSUS, is'sus, s. A genus of moth cicadas, which live in the thickets, and which may be found by beating the hedges in summer.

ISTHMIAN, ist'me-an, a. Pertaining to an isthmus, as the Isthmian games of Greece, so called from their being celebrated on Isthmus of Corinth.

ISTHMITIS, ist-mi'tis, s. Inflammation of the fauces.

ISTHMUS—ITERATION.

ISTHMUS, ist'mus, s. A neck of land joining two continents, or by which a peninsula is connected to the main land. In Anatomy, that which divides the cavity of the mouth from that of the pharynx;—(isthme de gosier, Fr.) also the narrow band which connects the two principle lobes of the thyroid gland.

ISTIOPHORUS, is-te-o'-o-rus, s. (istion, a sail, and phoreo, I bear, Gr.) The Sails, a genus of fishes, allied to Scomber and Xiphial, if not identical: Family, Scomberidae.

ISTIURUS, is-te-u'-rus, s. (istion, a sail, and oura, a tail, Gr. from the elevated and trenchant crest which extends along a part of the tail.) A genus of Saurian reptiles: Family, Iguanidae.

ISURUS, is-u'-rus, s. (isos, equal, and ouros, a tail, Gr. from the tail being equally divided.) A genus of fish, belonging to the Squalinae, or Typical Sharks: Family, Squalidae.

IT, it, pron. (hit, Sax. het, Dan. es, Germ. id, Lat.) A substitute or pronoun of the neuter gender, sometimes termed demonstrative, and standing for anything except males and females. It is much used as the nominative case or word to verbs called impersonal, as it rains, it snows.

ITALIAN, i-tal'yan, a. Pertaining to Italy; a native of Italy; the language of Italy.

ITALIANATE, i-tal'yan-ate, v. a. To make Italian; to render conformable to Italian custom or fashion.

ITALIANIZE, i-tal'yan-ize, v. n. To play the Italian; to speak Italian.

ITALIC, i-tal'ik, a. Relating to Italy or its characters; applied to distinguish a kind of type used by letterpress printers.

ITALICIZE, i-tal'e-size, v. a. To distinguish by italic letters.

ITALICS, i-tal'iks, s. pl. Italic letters.

ITCH, itsh, s. A cutaneous contagious disease, creating an uneasy sensation in the skin, which is relieved by scratching; it is occasioned by a species of acarus, a microscopic insect; figuratively, a constantly teasing desire;—v. n. to itch; to feel the sensation called itching; to have a teasing inclination.

ITCHING, itsh'ing, s. The state of the skin when we desire to scratch it; a constant teasing desire.

ITCHY, itsh'e, a. Infected with the itch.

ITE, ite, A termination used in chemical terms to indicate that a saline compound is formed by an acid ending in ous—thus, the sulpharites are formed by sulphurous acids with bases, while the sulphates are formed by sulphuric acid with the same bases.

ITEA, it'e-a, s. (the Greek name of the willow, and given to this genus on account of the quick growth of the Itea virginica.) A genus of plants, with extipulate leaves and racemose flowers: Order, E-calloniaceae.

ITEM, it'em, s. (Latin.) A new article; a hint; an innuendo;—ad. also;—v. a. to make a memorandum of.

ITERABLE, it'er-a-bl, a. Capable of being repeated. —Obsolete.

ITERANT, it'er-ant, a. Repeating.

ITERATE, it'er-ate, v. a. (itero, I repeat, Lat.) To repeat.

ITERATION, it'er-a'shun, s. (iteratio, Lat.) Repetition.

ITERATIVE—IXORA.

ITERATIVE, it'er-ay-tiv, a. Repeating.

ITIHASAS, i-te-has'as, s. The name common to the two great heroic poems of the Hindoos—the Ramayana and Maha Bharata.

ITINERACY, i-tin'er-a-se, a. A passing from place to place.

ITINERANT, i-tin'er-ant, s. One who travels from place to place, as an itinerant preacher or player;—a. passing from place to place; wandering.

ITINERARY, i-tin'er-a-re, s. (itinerare, Fr.) An account or description of a country for the use of travellers;—a. travelling; passing from place to place.

ITINERATE, i-tin'er-ate, v. n. To travel from place to place, particularly as a preacher or player; to wander without a settled habitation.

ITINERATING, i-tin'er-ay-ting, s. The practice of travelling from place to place.

ITIS, it'is, A termination in pathological words to the Greek name of the organ or part affected, implying a state of inflammation.

ITSELF, it-self', pron. The thing, and no other.

ITNERATE, it'ner-ate, s. (after M. Von Ittner.) A mineral of a bluish, smoke, or ash-grey colour, occurring massive, and seemingly in rhomboidal dodecahedral crystals. It consists of silica, 17.008; alumina, 12.62; lime, 1.49; soda, 1.49; soda, 2.82; peroxide of iron, 0.12; water, 10; and occasionally some gypsum or common salt: sp. gr. 2.38. Hardness = 700.

ITULUS, it'u-lus, s. A genus of insects.

IVORY, i'vur-e, s. The tusk or tooth of defence of the male elephant. It is an intermediate substance between bone and horn. The entire tooth is of a brownish-yellowish colour on the outside, internally white, solid near the point, and hollow towards the root. The grand consumption is for making ornamental utensils, mathematical instruments, cases, boxes, balls, combs, dice, and an infinity of toys. Ivory black, an animal charcoal produced by burning ivory in close vessels; like the other forms of animal charcoal, it is very effective in depriving certain substances of a bad odour and colour.

IVY, i've, s. (ifig, Sax.) The common name of the climbing evergreen, Hedera helix, and some other species of the same genus: Order, Araliaceae. Ivy gum, a resinous juice which exudes from the stem of the ivy.

IVYED, i'vid, a. Overgrown with ivy.

IVY-MANTLED, i've-man-tld, a. Covered with ivy.

IXIA, ik'se-a, s. (izo, I fix, Gr. in allusion to the viscid nature of the roots of some of the species.) A genus of plants: Order, Iridaceae.

IXODES, iks'o-des, s. A name given by Latreille to a subgenus of parasitical acari found on dogs, horses, oxen, and other quadrupeds, from which they can only be detached by tearing out the part to which they adhere. The common name, ticks, is given to these tormenting parasites.

IXODIA, ik-so'de-a, s. (ixodes, viscid, Gr.) A genus of composite plants: Suborder, Tubuliflorae.

IXORA, ig-zo'ra, s. (the name of a Malabar idol, to which the flowers of some of the species are offered.) A genus of shrubs—Indian, rarely African—with opposite leaves, and large flowers of a scarlet or rose colour, sometimes white: Order, Cinchonaceae.
